DEMO ROW AS LORDS GO ON TV

Striking miners invade chamber

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent

THE televising of Parliament had a doubly controversial opening in the Lords yesterday when striking miners briefly disrupted proceedings and the Earl of Stockton, the former Conservative Prime Minister, Harold Macmillan, resurrected his vision of a national government.

The demonstration happened as Lord Stockton was about to deliver a speech which was again short on praise for government and delighted Mrs Thatcher's critics, particularly the S D P-Liberal Alliance, which favours coalition government as an option.

He first made the suggestion in 1976 when Labour was in office, but he did not include it in his maiden speech in the Lords last year.

Two-and-a-half hours after the live television coverage began, about 20 miners stood up in the gallery above the Chamber and began chanting: "Coal not dole," and "Get rid of MacGregor."

They also waved a paper banner with the message: "Victory to the miners."

After a struggle police and attendants led away some of the demonstrators, the others following peacefully.

The miners were believed to have gained access to the gallery on passes signed by Left-wing Labour MPs, some of whom were involved in disrupting proceedings in the Commons last week in support of the miners.

Labour Chief Whip orders inquiry

The demonstration started another internal Labour row last night as Mr Michael Cocks, Labour Chief Whip, condemned the protest and ordered an inquiry into the part in it apparently played by Left-wing MPs.

"I am concerned about the reports I have heard," he said. "I shall establish the facts as quickly as I can and see the people concerned.

"I take a serious view of it. This ought not to happen. This is political opportunism of the worst order and highly counter-productive."

Two Left-wing Labour MPs confirmed last night that they had been connected with the protesters, though one denied having helped them into the Lords.

Mr Jeremy Corbyn (Islington North) said he had arranged for some of them to be in the gallery, and that in his view they had been right to make their views felt.

Mr Kevin Barron (Rother Valley) said that two of the protesters had arrived at Westminster and left a message that they wanted to see him. By the time he met them, they had already been ejected from the Lords.

"That was the first I knew of it," he added.

The demonstration was not seen on television because the rules agreed between the Westminster authorities and the broadcasting companies stipulate that only proceedings on the floor of the House may be shown.

Demonstrations are much rarer in the Lords than in the Commons and minor though yesterday's was, it was being cited as evidence last night by those MPs who are resisting the idea of television in the Commons.

They felt that the presence of television cameras even if covering only the floor of the House, could attract more publicity seekers.

Chamber unusually crowded

But the general view last night on the first day of the six-month experiment was one of approval.

The Lords chamber was unusually crowded, with many MPs watching as the cameras began to show the proceedings firstly the procession of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Hailsham, at the start of Question Time.

Then the peers moved on to a debate on a critical Labour motion about the Government's economic and social policies.

The highlight of the debate was the speech by Lord Stockton, 92, who, as in his maiden speech, particularly lamented rising unemployment.

Talking of the need for change, he said: "It must happen here. We must not be the slowest ship in the convoy. We must be the leader of the convoy or anyway among them.

"We must make an attempt to regain the leadership we have had for so long for the next generation or else slowly and majestically we will go down, not drastically, but so slowly sink down like a great ship."

Asking if Britain would sink, he added: "Or shall we make a new determined effort, putting as far as we can parties aside. We must have parties, but there can be cooperation and there can even be national government.

"So let us do the latter and historians in the future will not describe the end of this century as the beginning of the decline and fall of Britain but as the beginning of a new and glorious renaissance."

Mrs Thatcher's critics were also delighted by his denouncing of monetarist theory as "futile and purely theoretical and academic arguments."

Noises off fail to disturb Supermac

By SEAN DAY-LEWIS

THE most taxing role in "The House of Lords," a new television serial which opened on three out of the four channels yesterday, was taken by Lord Taylor of Gryfe.

He has not previously been considered a name to conjure with and his performance here went some way towards explaining his previous obscurity.

He was nevertheless billed to follow the star of the show, the old entertainer himself, the Earl of Stockton, or as he was known in his theatrical heyday Harold Macmillan.

Inevitably poor Lord Taylor had to begin his speech, calling for healing influences and Social Democrat votes, against the mass movement of an audience hurrying for the exit.

Lord Stockton himself was also delayed. There were angry noises which, to all the television viewer was allowed to see or hear, might have come from a rhubarbing section of the studio audience protesting that they were not able to see or hear anything properly.

The camera director obeyed strict orders not to show anything outside the script.

It takes the old-fashioned medium of print to explain that the noises came from 20 miners in the public gallery expressing their desire for a change in the chairmanship of the National Coal Board and declaring that coal was more desirable than dole.

As the noises diminished Lord Stockton, determined that no little local difficulty should ever remotely affect his act, said: "I shall get up now" and rose.

He was brilliant, of course.

20 JOBS AXED IN BR PURGE

By STEPHEN WARD
Industrial Staff

BRITISH RAIL has begun to carry out its threat to axe up to 600 jobs if the N U R and the traindrivers' union, Aslef, do not lift their "blacking" of coal and iron ore movements in support of the miners.

It was revealed yesterday that the first 20 jobs, at Immingham and Scunthorpe, have already gone because British Steel had made it clear that goods transferred to road because of the blacking would not return to rail even when the miners' strike ends. Scunthorpe has 180 railway workers, and Immingham 250.

British Rail yesterday said there had been no compulsory redundancies, and the exercise had been completed by early retirement and transfers to other areas.

'Gone for ever'

It said another 100 jobs had already been earmarked as "gone for ever" at depots around the country because of the blacking, and discussion on these had started with local unions.

Mr John Palette, BR managing director for personnel, has pointed out forcefully to the unions that as many as 600 jobs are at risk if freight business which has been switched to road transport because of the blacking does not return to the railways.

This amounts to 600,000 tons of coal a week, and is increasing daily as more coal is produced and more pits come into production.

Two days ago British Rail gave Aslef and the N U R two weeks to reconsider the blacking of coal and iron ore.

NACODS MEN GO IN AT KIVETON

Nearly 350 miners went underground at Kiveton Park Colliery, South Yorkshire, yesterday when 19 pit deputies—members of the National Association of Colliery Overmen, Deputies and Shotfirers—crossed N U M picket lines.

About 40 pickets saw them drive into the pit in a convoy as another 19 miners ended their strike and went back to work.

Altogether, 382 miners returned to work nationwide yesterday taking the total so far this week to 2,900—higher than for the whole of last week.

Kinnock U-turn on pit strike debate

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Correspondent

LABOUR'S National Executive and Shadow Cabinet closed ranks yesterday in support of striking miners as the conviction grew within the party leadership that Mrs Thatcher had overplayed her hand by demanding a public surrender from Mr Arthur Scargill before talks could begin.

The executive, accusing the Government of "doing all in their power to keep the dispute going" when the miners were ready to settle, promised a new campaign of joint Labour-NUM rallies and fund-raising to relieve hardship in the coalfields.

And the Shadow Cabinet dropped its objections to an early Commons debate on the dispute, with Mr Kinnock judging that such an airing of the issues would no longer be a political bonus for the Government.

Talks were under way last night with the Government on the chances of fitting such a debate into the routine Commons timetable, with Monday week the date on offer.

New-found unity

Labour's facade of new-found unity was undermined by the part which Left-wing MPs allegedly played in staging the demonstration in support of the strike which erupted in the public gallery of the Lords yesterday afternoon as the Earl of Stockton rose to speak.

But Mr Kinnock and senior colleagues on both Left and Right were firmly of the view that Mrs Thatcher's handling of the dispute was, for the first time in months, playing into Labour's hands.

STABBED Pc CRITICAL

By Our Crime Staff

Pc George Mammond, 47, a father of three, was critically ill last night after being stabbed in the stomach by a coloured youth when he went to buy cigarettes at a shop in Lordship Lane, East Dulwich.

The youth stole £10 from the till and fled. He was described as of West Indian appearance, aged 18 to 20, 5ft 10in to 6ft tall with a short Afro hair style and wearing a blue bomber jacket and jeans.

ABBEY HOME LOANS RISE

By Our City Staff

The Abbey National, Britain's second largest building society, yesterday raised its mortgage and savings rates in line with other societies, despite continuing protests that no rise is yet necessary.

From Feb. 1 the Abbey will charge a basic loan rate of 13 per cent. Savers will receive an extra ¾ per cent. net of basic rate tax, lifting the seven-day accounts rate to 8¼ per cent. net.

U.S. AIRLINE SEEKS BIG FARES RISE

By Air Cdre G. S. Cooper

PEOPLE EXPRESS, the American cut-price carrier on the London-New York route, has applied to the Civil Aviation Authority to increase fares substantially without waiting for the major trans-Atlantic airlines' tariff rise in April.

C A A approval is sought by People Express for single fares of £154 economy and £409 first class, compared to existing fares of £122 and £358.

Virgin Atlantic, which compete with People Express on the Gatwick to Newark route, also wants to raise fares soon because of the fall in the value of the pound against the dollar.

Higher prices for tickets bought in the United States for People Express flights become effective on March 1.

Virgin Atlantic is seeking C A A approval to increase its single fares from March 22 by £10 in mid-week and by £20 at week-ends. Fares of £149 and £159 respectively are under consideration from June.

Baby has multi-heart operation

By Our Health Services Correspondent

AN 11-month-old baby girl with a heart so malformed that doctors at first thought it was impossible to operate was recovering from one of the most complex operations ever attempted on a baby's heart last night.

Lauren Wooley, from Sittingbourne, Kent, was said to be making excellent progress in the intensive care unit of the Brompton Hospital, London, after four hours of intricate surgery.

To enable the operation to take place her body was cooled for a period to stop all circulation so that the operation could be done on a "bloodless subject."

Mr Christopher Lincoln, consultant cardiothoracic surgeon at the hospital, said Lauren was born with a unique combination of heart defects.

Major valves

Two major valves were malformed, the veins draining blood from her lungs were not connected to the heart as they should be, the artery that allows blood into the lungs was narrowed and there was a major hole in the heart—which itself was on the wrong side of the chest.

The operation involved the insertion of an artificial plastic artery to replace the narrowed artery and the re-attachment of veins draining blood from her lungs to her heart.

Another operation to close the hole in the heart and rebuild the two valves will probably have to be performed in six or eight years' time.

Mr Lincoln said that all these operations had been performed individually before but never in combination. The surgery was so intricate that he wore magnifying lenses over his normal glasses.

He said: "When I saw her this morning her condition was excellent. She is never going to run in the Olympic Games but she could now lead a normal non-athletic life."

Mrs Pamela Wooley, Lauren's mother, was at her bedside and a hospital spokesman said Lauren was expected to remain in hospital for a few weeks.

£3·25bn TAX CUTS PLEA BY THE CBI

By Our Business Correspondent

A £3·25 billion tax-cutting Budget to help improve the "will to work" and raise the income of the lower paid was urged yesterday by the Confederation of British Industry.

It wants personal allowances raised by 10 per cent, above the rate of inflation and estimates about a million would be taken out of the tax net.

The C B I feels that Mr Lawson, Chancellor, will still have around £2 billion available this year and £3·25 billion in a full year to achieve personal and business tax cuts despite current uncertainties.

13 HURT AS WIND HURLS JET 1,000ft

By Our Los Angeles Staff

A Pan American 747 jet from London to San Francisco was suddenly hit by severe turbulence and shot up 1,000 feet in about three seconds, injuring 13 aboard.

The aircraft was at 32,000ft over Greenland when a 10-knot wind abruptly increased to 100 knots and shifted 80 degrees, causing the "uncontrollable climb."

One American passenger who had been asleep across three seats was launched into the air and fell into an aisle severely spraining a leg.

Press baron's grandson, 19 in kidnap fear

By MICHAEL FARR in Bonn

SVEN AXEL SPRINGER, 19, grandson of Axel Springer, the millionaire West German publisher, was yesterday feared kidnapped, with a telephoned ranson demand of Dm15m (£4,500,000) having been made to his mother.

Sven was last seen on Sunday night dressed in pyjamas in his room at the Lyceum Alpinum School in Znoz, near St Moritz, Switzerland, police said yesterday.

They said his mother Rosemarie, who lives in Munich, received eight telephone calls on Tuesday in which Sven said in a recording: "I was kidnapped on Sunday night. No press, no police, or I will be killed."

The tape was played yesterday to officials at the Springer Press in Hamburg, where a spokesman refused to make a comment.

Axel Springer is the owner of West Germany's largest publishing group. The Springer empire includes the country's biggest tabloid daily, BILD, as well as the serious daily paper, DIE WELT. The Springer group, whose political position is firmly Right-wing, also publishes a string of weekly magazines.

Sven Axel Springer—kidnapped.

The publishing group has 11,500 employees and made a profit of Dm36 million (£10 million) in 1983 on turnover of Dm2,400 million (£656 million). It is run from Hamburg and West Berlin.

Axel Springer, 72, who was said last night to be outside West Germany but "somewhere in Europe," has been married five times and has two sons.

The kidnapped youth is the son of Axel Springer Jr. who committed suicide in 1980.

Two detectives from Munich have been sent to Switzerland to join the kidnap investigation. Police last night had not established whether the kidnapping was the work of criminals or terrorists.

£ TAKES ANOTHER BEATING

CENTRAL banks left the pound to the mercies of the foreign exchange market yesterday, and sterling slumped by more than 1 cent to its lowest closing level at 1·11¼.

Rumours that oil exporting countries planned to cut their oil prices by $2½ a barrel triggered heavy selling of sterling.

The oil exporting countries were quick to deny the rumour published in an English language paper in Saudi Arabia, but the pound did not recover.

Central banks, which sold up to $50 million to try to hold down the dollar on Tuesday following the meeting of finance ministers in Washington last week, made no attempt to interfere again yesterday, except for a token sale of $7 million by the German Bundesbank.

Interest rates in the London money market rose nervously with the key three-month rate in the inter-bank market rising by ·3/3 per cent. to 12·3/8 per cent.

Uncertainty spread to the stock market and profit-taking sent the Financial Times 30 share index back down 20·8 points from Tuesday's peak to 1005·7.

LAWSON REJECTS ECONOMY U-TURN

Mr Lawson, Chancellor, last night flatly rejected calls for the Government to change its economic policy. He said increasing the money supply or Government spending would merely "trigger off another disastrous bout of inflation."

He told businessmen at Westminster that recovery lay in measures to "restore incentives to reduce the burden of taxes, encourage flexibility in pay and mobility of labour, and promote new businesses and the acquisition of new skills."

HOPES OF PIT PEACE TALKS IN BALANCE

By JOHN RICHARDS Industrial Correspondent

HOPES that fresh peace talks in the 45-week pit strike can be called next week depend on the outcome of today's meeting in Sheffield of the 24-man miners' union executive.

The Coal Board is making no comment pending the meeting, but Mr Willis, T U C general secretary, said reports suggested that "positive points" had emerged in the informal talks between the N U M and the board on Monday.

He said: "In my judgment the talks on Monday and events since could just conceivably be a basis for talks, and then an honourable settlement, if everybody works at it, and it will need a great deal of hard work."

The T U C would stay in close touch with the N U M and would "continue to do all it can to facilitate the negotiations."

The "positive points," which he refused to enlarge upon, were for the evaluation and pursuit of the N U M executive. The "events since" included the N U M statement that it was prepared to enter talks "without pre-conditions."

Mr Willis refused to be drawn into any direct criticism of the Government for its alleged role in blocking the resumption of negotiations.

'Basis for settlement'

"I do not think all statements have been helpful," he said, "but I am continuing to urge all parties in this matter to assist with getting negotiations restarted."

His opinion was that the talks between Mr Ned Smith, Coal Board director of industrial relations, and Mr Peter Heathfield, N U M general secretary, "could lay a basis for a settlement." Mr Willis added: "I would, if I was either of the parties."

Mr Michael McGahey, N U M vice-president, said the union was "very anxious" to settle the dispute. "We have made all the offers. We have made it clear we want to negotiate. Hopefully, the Coal Board will respond."

Both the board and the Prime Minister stressed on Tuesday that the N U M must indicate it is prepared to drop its "impossible demand" that uneconomic pits are kept open before any fresh talks can take place.

The suspicion is that, despite the no conditions undertaking, the N U M will still hold to its original line that talks must take place within the context of Plan for Coal which, according to the union, does not allow pit closures on economic grounds.

Mr Scargill, union president, said again yesterday: "We have made it clear we are available to negotiate without preconditions."

He met leaders of the South Derbyshire Area in an attempt to prevent them joining Nottinghamshire miners in a potential break-away from the national union. After the meeting at Swadlincote, Mr Scargill said he had given "certain assurances" to the South Derbyshire men.

These were, he added, "pertinent and very central"; but Mr Ken Toon, area secretary, said a membership ballot seeking approval to introduce rule changes divorcing the South Derbyshire Area from the national union would still go ahead.

He said the area leadership would consider Mr Scargill's assurances before the ballot was held and would also wait to see what happened at today's executive.

It has been reported that the N U M leadership is prepared to modify proposals for revamping the area representation on the national executive which would have resulted in South Derbyshire and Leicestershire being among moderate areas which lost their seats.

The proposal now is understood to be that all areas with more than 1,000 members would maintain their representation.

Breakaway move ends in disarray

By JAMES O'BRIEN

WORKING miners "scarpered" from a meeting yesterday planned to form a Yorkshire committee to lead a breakaway from the National Union of Mineworkers.

They left the Central Town Club and Institute at Normanton, West Yorks, when they discovered that pickets were waiting in the bar where journalists had arrived for a Press conferenc.

Among those in the bar was Mr Harold Wadsworth, branch delegate from Kellingley Colliery, Castleford, who was "an unofficial observer" for the mineworkers' union.

A meeting was being held in a private room attended by between 30 and 40 representatives of working miners from pits in the Yorkshire area who are concerned at the handling of the pit strike by the union's leadership.

The meeting was inconclusive and there were no decisions taken to set up the committee.

End conference threat

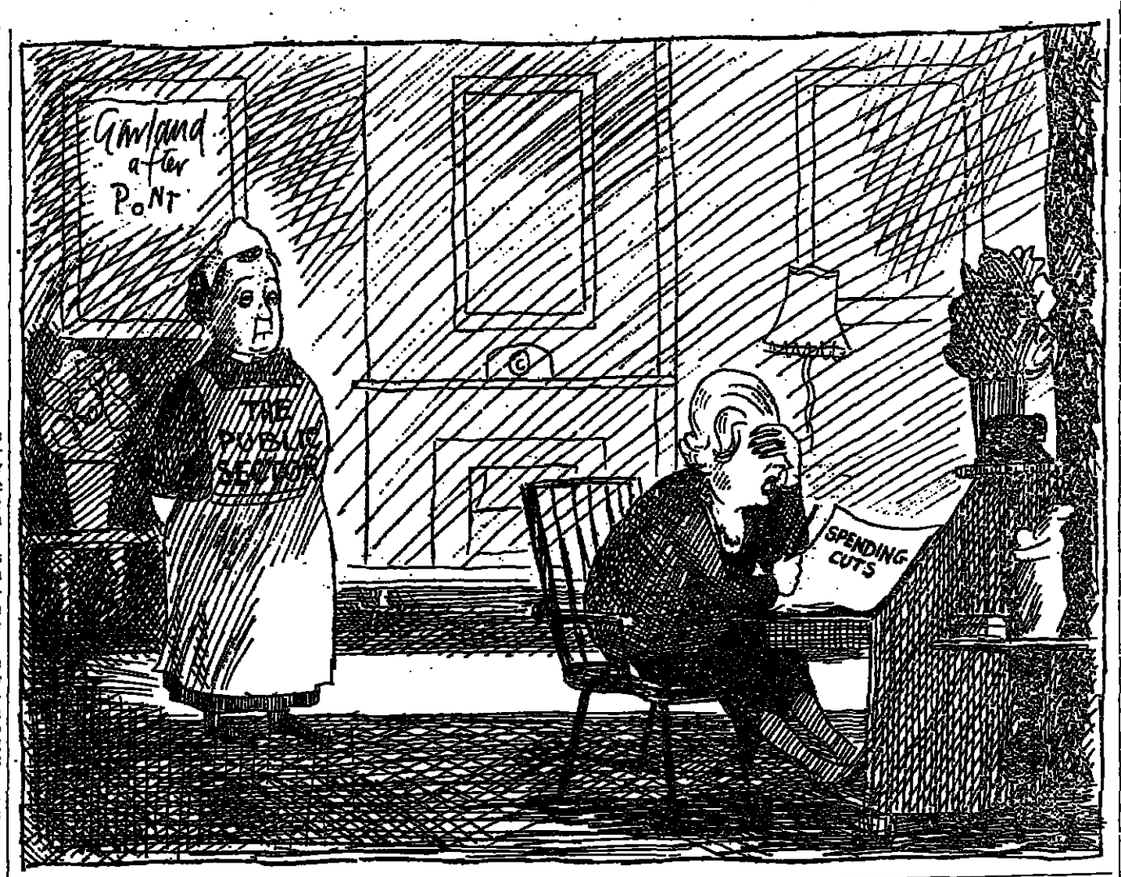
Mr Terence Hudson, a member of C O S A and the training officer at Stillingfleet Colliery in the Selby coalfield, North Yorks, Mr Charles Poynton, a surface welder, and Mr Terence Moore, an underground diesel engine driver, both working members at Allerton Bywater Colliery, near Castleford, emerged from the meetings.

Mr Hudson said if the pickets interrupted the Press conference it would be ended immediately and that questions about the situation in Nottinghamshire would not be answerd.

A picket shouted: "We're here that's why." Nottinghamshire N U M and its threatened expulsion from the national union was soon mentioned in question and brought answers to the annoyance of Mr Hudson who later disassociated himself from talk about "breakaways."

A requestab y another picket to unlock the doors to let their colleagues waiting outside into the club was refused.

Mr Poynton, looking at journalists and a battery of television cameras, said: "Unfortunately with all you lot here the men who intended coming into this room from the meeting have scarpered, taken flight and gone." They did not want to be identified as working miners.



THE BRITISH CHARACTER
ABSENCE OF IDEAS FOR MEALS

382 MORE RETURN

By Our Industrial Staff

ANOTHER 382 miners returned to work yesterday to take the total this week to 2,900, which is already higher than for the whole of last week.

The highest return to work came in Yorkshire, where there were 113 new faces

In South Wales there were still only 335 men working out of 19,600, but men clocked on for the first time at two pits in the region.

Seventeen went in at St John's colliery, Maesteg, Mid-Glamorgan, and three went in at the Coedely pit, near Llantrisant.

Since the start of the strike, more than 10,000 N U M members have left the industry on the following grounds:

Deceased, or retired through ill-health: 873
Retired early, or at 65: 462
Voluntary redundancy: 5,751
Other reasons, such as starting another job: 2,362
Dismissed: 643

The board estimates that 1,000 have been taken on over this period.

The 382 ex-strikers returning to work yesterday were in the following areas:

	New faces	Total at work	Total workforce
Yorks.	113	4,923	12,500
Western	28	11,513	14,200
N. Derbys.	57	6,431	10,000
S. Wales	27	335	19,600
Scotland	61	3,865	12,500
S. Midlands	—	8,101	8,558
N. East	95	5,329	20,200
Notts.	—	28,688	30,000
Kent	1	139	2,114

The workforce figures do not include employees at coal products plants or N C B workshops. So the total workforce aggregate is lower than the 187,300 total N U M membership employed by the Coal Board.

While some Coal Board areas give a "total at work" figure based on numbers clocking on over the previous 24-hours, others give the total not on strike, so the aggregate of this column does not equal the 77,000 N U M members the board says are defying the strike, because on any one day some are absent through sickness, rest-days, etc.

Jobs Minister studies Chatham controversy

By DAVID MILLWARD

LORD YOUNG, Minister without portfolio, with responsibility for job creation, arrived in Medway yesterday for evidence of the "North Kent economic miracle" where heavy job losses have been absorbed with only a marginal increase in unemployment.

His visit coincided with the arrival of the Sealink ferry St Christopher (7,400 tons) which provided a reminder of Chatham Dockyard's past and reopened a controversy in the area.

The dockyard closed in 1982 with the los of 7,000 jobs, but Thames Ship Repairers moved in and provides work for 250.

It says it has a full order book including the 18-day refit of the St Christopher, and if it was allowed to carry out shipbuilding, another 1,000 jobs could be created.

But English Estates, the Government agency now responsible for Chatham Dockyard, does not want the ship repairers to stay. The firm's lease expires in June.

Vision of future

English Estates believes the dockyard's future lies as a combination of housing, offices, light industry and leisure activities such as a marina and museums exploiting Chatham's history.

It is committed to spending £12 million over the next three years to get its plans underway and the overall development of the yard could cost up to £400 million.

Th eagency believes it could provide up to 5,000 jobs at the dockyard over th enext 10 to 15 years with its scheme.

Thames Ship Repairers enjoys considerable local support. Lord Young was met by Mr Adrian Gulvin, a Conservative member of Rochester city council who pleaded on the firm's behalf.

The Government is convinced that traditional heavy engineering jobs can be replaced by small companies working in light and service industries.

This is what has happened n North ent where three local authorities, Gravesham, Rochester and Gillingham, have joined together to launch the North Kent Enterprise Office.

The office forms part of an aggressive campaign to promote the area which, after 18 months, can boast considerable success. In May, 1983, when the campaign started, unemployment stodd at about 19,000 or 16 per cent.

The latest figures show unemployment at just over 20,000. But when Chatha m Dockyard closed, local economists feared that those jobs, other major industrial redundancies and 7,000 school-leavers could bring the dole queue up to 30,000.

SMALL FIRMS

Attack on 'red tape'

OUR POLITICAL STAFF writes: Lord Young is shortly expected to approve a package of new measures to help people set up their own small business.

The aim is to cut down the huge amount of red tape involved in setting up a small business. It is hoped that it will get full Cabinet backing before the March 19 Budget.

The main thrust of the proposals will be towards firms intending to employ less than about 20 people and it is hoped that an entrepreneur of such a new firm could be offered incentives to get started and create new jobs.

PETROL PRICE RISE SOUGHT

By Our Business Correspondent

OIL companies yesterday continued their efforts to prepare motorists for a rise in petrol prices as signs grew that a price war with cuts of 2p-3p a gallon is breaking out in some parts of the country.

Texaco said that an early rise of 5p a gallon on the current average four-star price of 189p is needed to cover increased costs resulting from the weakness of sterling against the dollar, the oil industry currency.

Some industry executives were blaming Esso, the second biggest retailer, for holding back the increase. One executive said: "We should be sharing the agony but Esso won't move."

Free market

Esso denied it was blocking any rise, and argued that an increase would not "stick" because there was cheaper petrol available in the free market.

Shell said it had no plans for an increase, but said a rise was "desperately needed." The company has started to introduce subsidies for some dealers because they are in danger of losing trade to cut-price competitors.

Price cuts which started in the north-west are spreading to other parts of the country. Prices have fallen by around 2p a gallon in parts of London.

THE T U C is to reconsider its policy of snubbing the Government's offer of grant-aid for trade union ballots, in view of the mounting challenge to its unity from influential manual unions which are prepared to take the money.

Mr Willis, T U C general secretary, said after yesterday's General Council meeting had discussed the issue that pressure for reassessment i certain to result in a major debate at Congress in September.

The General Council also produced a range of proposals for a special conference before that date to stem the widening rift in the movement between those who would take the money and those who regard it as a bribe.

The revolt, led by the Engineering union and the Electricians' union, is clearly eroding the T U C's wall of total non-cooperation with the Government's labour laws and the matter is due to come to a head within the next two weeks.

Millions at stake

The Government has set a Feb. 5 deadline for unions wishing to take the ballot money and get retrospective payments dated back to the 1980 Employment Act which the system was promulgated. Millions of pounds are at stake.

Mr Terry Duffy, the engineers' president, said after yesterday's General Council debate that his own national executive stood firm on its acceptance policy, and he was sure that the result of a poll of his one million members, to be announced on Tuesday, would overwhelmingly back that line.

The 365,000-strong electricians' union has also ratified its decision. Among other unions either committed or poised to join them are the small but influential British Air Line Pilots' Association and the 196,000-member Communication Workers' Union.

Final warning

The General Council yesterday gave the engineers and the electricians a final unequivocal warning that disciplinary procedures will be set in motion from the day that they accept the money. Voting was 28-11.

A suggestion that unions should be allowed to take the money but "freeze" it until the whole question has been reconsidered, was raised but apparently given short shrift.

In taking such a hard-line approach the General Council was secure in the knowledge that the process of investigation, consultation and appeal must mean many months will go by before disciplinary "sentences" could be imposed.

That will give time for the dilemma to be examined and there will be strong pressure on the T U C's "inner cabinet," its Finance and General Purposes Committee, to recommend a spring conference, some have even suggested a recalled Congress, to do just that.

NUM 'ignored members' violence'

THE MINERS' union was accused yesterday in the High Court of being more concerned with the safety of pickets than with the victims of picket line violence.

The claim was made during the hearing of an action by 20 working South Wales miners for an injunction outlawing mass picketing and banning their area leaders from funding unlawful picketing.

Mr LOUIS BLOM-COOPER, Q C, for the men, said the N U M, both at a national and local level, had taken no steps to comply with legal limits on the number of pickets.

Official union minutes showed its only reaction to picket line violence was to recommend protective clothing and safety helmets to protect pickets from "police brutality."

The 20 pitmen are suing their area union, its leaders, the leadership of the national union including Mr ARTHUR SCARGILL, the national union itself and the entire membership of the national strike co-ordinating committee. The action is being defended by the union.

Mr Blom-Cooper said picketing in South Wales had been "organised and orchestrated by the union." Its minutes showed no recognition by its leader of the "inevitable consequences of mass picketing—violence, intimidation, abuse and threatening language.

Despite an order in August last year sequestrating the area union's assets, it had continued to spend £25,000 a week in payment to pickets.

Mr GEORGE REES, secretary of the South Wales N U M, in a sworn statement, said it was "absur to suggest that the union had encouraged or incited or bribed by paying expenses to men to demonstrate."

He said the assumption seemed to be, that striking miners, who had put up with the hardship of staying out of work for months to protect their future, their jobs and their communities, and who were angry when a fellow member broke ranks and returned to work, did not wish to demonstrate their feelings spontaneously.

"We cannot control the spontaneous overflow of feelings from the men in these circumstances," he said. Since the sequestration of the South Wales union funds the union had survived on the generosity of the public.

Mr Rees went on to challenge th eworking miners' assertion that there was a legal limit of six on the number of pickets allowed at each pit. "They are asking the court to legislate where Parliament has refused to do so," he said.

The hearing was adjourned until today.

Saloons and Estates from £6189
ZX Turbo Saloon illustrated £7994

Every line of the new Bluebird spells out the promise of a perfectly balanced, powerful and luxurious saloon. Lines are clean and elegant. Controls are light and immediately responsive.

Precision engineers will understand that 'blue-printing', the art of building to the precise designed standards, is a target rarely achieved. Nissan position Bluebird as the blueprint target for other manufacturers of high performance thoroughbred 1.8 and 2.0 litre saloons. Bluebird has power in abundance; the 2.0 litre saloon produces 105 bhp with an autobahn maximum of 111 mph; the 1.8 litre turbo boosts these figures to 135 bhp and 121 mph with a 0 to 60 mph in 8.8* seconds, the E.C.C.S. electronic management system monitors every aspect of the engine, split-second by split-second, for perfect performance. Transverse engine and front-wheel drive make Bluebird sure-footed in either wet or dry conditions with firm, balanced circuit braking through wide, low profile tyres.

The interior breathes quiet luxury. High quality fabrics, like tricot velour covered seats and door linings. Equipped to full executive levels, Bluebird SGL has power steering, central locking, powered windows and door mirrors and comes complete with high-tech in-car entertainment in stereo sound. Specification covers everything from rev counter to delayed fade courtesy lights. The driver's seat is adjustable in every imaginable dimension for tireless long distance travel. Purposefully quick. Purposefully quiet and 'blueprint' dependable. That's Bluebird: at your Nissan dealer.

SUSPICIOUS WIFE MADE HOUSE A 'FORT KNOX'

A WOMAN who suspected her husband of taking tea, semolina, and other items from the pantry and tampering with her clothes in the wardrobe had locks fitted to all the doors in their 14-room home and described it as "like Fort Knox."

Seven years ago Mrs GAY DIGBY put a stop to sexual intercourse with her husband Gerald because she had an allergy and feared she would develop a rash, said Judge HUNTER yesterday in the High Court Family Division.

But Mrs Digby, 51, claimed her husband was "abusive, unpleasant, surly and churlish" and asked for a divorce because of his unreasonable behaviour.

Judge Hunter, dismissing the petition, said Mr Digby, 50, a company director, was a man of "outstanding forbearance" who had shown "patience and sympathy for this woman and still wanted to keep the marriage alive."

On the other hand, the wife was "a rather cold, utterly self-centered and somewhat neurotic woman."

The judge said he believed the husband's version of events and described the "manifold groundless suspicions of this woman which this husband has had to contend with."

The couple have been married 27 years and have a grown-up son. They live in a £170,000 house in Foxley Lane, Purley, Surrey.

Hidden keys

The judge said Mrs Digby locked all the doors in the house when she went out. Once when the husband came home it took him two hours to find one of the keys because she kept changing the hiding places.

She was suspicious about his business life and the way he ran his three companies in the building trade. But when he tried to talk to her she did not listen. "Her closed mind will not permit her to hear anything she does not wish," said the judge.

There were occasions when Mr Digby lost his temper, once kicking a hole in the bathroom door, pulling the wires out of the telephone, and slapping his wife.

"Whatever the husband did the wife brought it on her own head," said the judge.

"It would be contrary to common sense, human sense and justice if I were to find this patient, kindly man has behaved in such a way that this wife cannot reasonably be expected to live with him," he said.

Mr Digby said after the hearing: "I still want my wife and will be doing everything to get us back together."

MOTHER AND TWINS MUST QUIT HOME

A WOMAN accused of marrying to provide a home for her two children was ordered out of the house by two Appeal Court judges yesterday.

Lord Justice PURCHAS sitting with Lord Justice ACKNER dismissed an appeal by Mrs MARY GADD who was told to leave her husband Gerald's home at Raeburn Avenue, Surbiton, Surrey, by Judge Mark Smith at Reigate County Court last October.

The couple married in December, 1982, and Mrs Gadd moved into the house with her 12-year-old twins from a previous relationship.

But they only lived together for just over a year before the husband was "obliged to leave the home" because of differences between them.

Divorce proceedings

He began divorce proceedings and applied to the court to get her out of the home where he had lived for 19 years.

In ordering the wife to leave the home the county court judge found that her object in marrying him was "to get into the husband's house with her two children," said Lord Justice PURCHAS.

He added that in his judgment the judge had ample evidence on which to make that finding and he found himself unable to say he had erred in law in deciding that it would be a "gross injustice if she were allowed to do so."

She was given 28 days to go.

'Horrifying' scenes at FA Cup tie

FOOTBALL fans supporting non-league Bognor Regis were involved in "horrifying" scenes when their team played an FA Cup tie at Swansea, Sgt ALUN LLOYD told Swansea magistrates yesterday.

He described the violence as the worst he had seen in 25 years on the force. Dog handlers sent into the crowd were beaten and kicked, their dogs were attacked, and one was even picked up and thrown into the air.

Mr DAVID EVANS, prosecuting, said that about 1,000 Bognor fans were segregated from Swansea supporters at the Vetch Field on Nov. 17 last year. In addition to the dog handlers only five policemen were on duty.

The visiting supporters kicked and punched the officers, threw beer cans and coins and spat at them.

Two dog handlers and their dogs tried to make their way into the crowd from the pitch. But both the handlers and the dogs were kicked.

The situation became so ugly that the five officers had to charge into the crowd to rescue their colleagues.

Pushed over

Sgt Lloyd said he saw RICHARD WILLIAM RAYNER, 18, of Yapton, near Bognor, run to a fence separating the rival supporters and spit towards the Swansea fans. Then he took what looked like a coin out of his pocket and threw it at them.

Rayner denied a charge of using threatening, abusive or insulting words. He was convicted, fined £75 and ordered to pay £50 costs.

He said he was pushed over when the officers rushed into the crowd to rescue the dog handlers. He was immediately arrested and could not understand why.

NICHOLAS JAMES WYATT, 18, of Mansfield Road, Bognor, denied a similar charge. The prosecution offered no evidence after Wyatt agreed to be bound over to be of good behaviour for 12 months in the sum of £100.

WOMAN, 64, PAID OUT £11,350 FOR 2 DAYS' WORK

Miss Millicent Powell, 64, paid out £11,350, almost her life savings, to a contractor who spent two days re-laying a drive, tidying paths, lopping trees and demolishing two sheds, Mr Richard Jenkins, prosecuting, told Oxford Crown Court yesterday.

Miss Powell, of Grove, Oxfordshire, paid out a further £739 to have shoddy work put right. Mr Jenkins said a builder had estimated that the work done should have cost £624.

Michael Joyce, 26, of Slade Park, Oxford, denied obtaining money by deception. Mr Nicholas Brown, defending, said the culprit was Joyce's uncle, of the same name, who was now in Ireland. The case was adjourned until today.

He had sent it to the D V L C in Swansea to get it renewed. He was caught out because the forger had spelt the word "licence" wrongly with an "s."

'One hotel for Cabinet' policy defended

By T. A. SANDROCK Crime Correspondent

PUBLIC criticism over accommodating the Prime Minister and some Cabinet members in one hotel, which followed the Brighton bombing, was answered yesterday by Mr Roger Birch, Chief Constable of Sussex.

He said that dispersal would increase the threat and make security more difficult.

In a report to his police authority, Mr Birch said that police involvement in protecting, on a day and night basis, 12 persons who were not housed at the Grand Hotel but whose threat assessment justified full-time protection, would take considerable manpower.

No fewer than 28 Metropolitan Police protection officers and 73 Sussex officers were exclusively engaged on this task for one week.

Greater risk

Where V I Ps were dispersed and needed to travel daily to one centre, their risk of exposure to attack in the course of travelling was increased.

Commenting on the inquiry report into Sussex police security operations for the Conservative party conference in October, when the Grand Hotel was bombed, Mr Birch said that Mr John Hoddinott, Deputy Chief Constable of Hampshire, who conducted the inquiry, had rejected suggestions that not to have searched the hotel thoroughly was a breach of security.

To completely "sterilise" the hotel would have taken 20 search teams, each of three specially trained officers working about 14 days on an eight-hour shift. This assumed uninterrupted progress.

Inadequate search

Including officers for cordon work, total manpower requirement for such an operation was estimated at 218 officers per 24 hours. The salary costs alone would have been in the region of £128,184, plus subsistence and other ancillary expenditure.

Answering criticisms about the inadequate search of the first floor, Mr Birch said Mrs Thatcher's room was searched by police officer and dogs trained to detect explosives. This was also done for the Foreign Secretary's room, but not the Home Secretary's.

This resulted from imprecise written and verbal communication, aggravated by the involvement of more than one specialist unit with some overlapping responsibilities.

DRIVER ON 108 CHARGES WAS 'UPSET'

A DRIVER was taken off the road yesterday after admitting a 17-page list of motoring offences. He faced 108 summonses altogether, and pleaded guilty to 74 of them.

South Wales police pulled up Patrick Goldsmith, of Cefn Glas, Bridgend, 16 times in under three months in South Wales last autumn, Bridgend magistrates heard.

Goldsmith, 25, unemployed, of Bridgend, admitted charges of having no insurance, driving licence or M o T test-certificate, as well as having defective tyres, brakes and lights. He also pleaded guilty to fraudulently using a tax disc which he swapped over from his two cars.

The court spent 30 minutes working through the list of the summonses as Goldsmith's solicitor, Mr ROY SNAPE, gave the plea to each charge.

"I am not for a moment suggesting he is a nut-case, although you might, after looking at the long list of offences, think they were the actions of a madman," he said.

At the time of the offences Goldsmith had been upset about the death of his grandmother, who had brought him up. He had not appreciated the seriousness of all the motoring summonses.

The case was adjourned until Feb. 20 for social and medical reports. Goldsmith was given bail on condition he did not drive any vehicle and reported to police three times a week.

£340,000 for boy damaged during birth

A 10-YEAR-OLD boy, brain-damaged and severely disabled after asphyxiation at birth at a maternity hospital, was awarded £340,000 agreed damages in the High Court in London yesterday.

Despite SUNIL KRISHNAMURTHY's plight, he is intelligent and "knows what he is missing and what he cannot do," his counsel, Mrs MARGARET PUXON, Q C, told the court.

He suffers from atheroid cerebral palsy and has no power over his limbs, which are paralysed, said Mrs Puxon.

He can neither hold up his head nor control his mouth and cannot speak, except to grunt.

Through his father, Mr VENKATRAMAN KRISHNAMURTHY, an engineer, of Colyton Way, Purley, Berks, Sunil had sued the East Anglian Health Authority, alleging medical negligence at Mill Hill Road Hospital, Cambridge.

Parents praised

After a nine-day hearing last June, the health authority admitted liability and judgment was entered for Sunil for damages to be assessed if not agreed.

Judge RUSSELL praised Mr Krishnamurthy and his wife, Shanta, yesterday for the way they had cared for their son.

Mrs Puxon told the judge that, when Sunil was born after a prolonged labour, he was just alive and severely asphyxiated. He did not breathe for 14 to 16 minutes.

She went on: "Sunil's mother was in labour for 21 hours and a Caesarian section was performed. It was alleged that the medical team allowed her to remain in obstructed labour for too long."

Outside court, Mr Krishnamurthy said: "Sunil is a very happy boy. Everyone likes him. He is progressing very well and is starting to use a computer."

Love affair led to suicide by MP's son

JAMES TAPSELL, 18, son of Sir PETER TAPSELL, the Tory M P, killed himself because of a failed love affair, and the pressure of examinations, an inquest at Horncastle, Lincolnshire, was told yesterday.

The former Harrow schoolboy left a suicide note saying: "To my family. I am sorry for I cannot go on without her. Be kind to her. I love her and will be watching her."

The boy's body was found in his fume-filled Mini at his family home, Roughton Hall, Woodhall Spa, Lincolnshire, last Friday night.

Sir Peter, M P for East Lindsey, said: "It seems to me the tragedy must have been caused by the pains of first love coming at the time of examinations.

James had spent the week before his death at the family's London flat with them. When he joined his father for the train journey to the constituency, he told him he did not think the exam he had taken that morning "had gone very well."

Sir Peter later went to a constituency function and returned home with his French wife Gabrielle at about 11.30.

In the garage they found James' body in the back of the car. A hose pipe led from the exhaust into the vehicle

A post mortem showed that his death was due to carbon monoxide poisoning.

Mr IAN MITCHELL-SMITH, the Spilsby Coroner, said: "Eighteen is an age in which everything is so black and white. A minor setback can seem like the end of the world. It is a very emotional age. I have no alternative but to find that James Tapsell killed himself."

U.N. FLY FOOD DIRECT TO REFUGEE CAMP

By JAMES MacMANUS Diplomatic Staff

A UNITED NATIONS airlift has been launched to fly emergency supplies direct to the Sudanese-Ethiopian border where 200,000 Ethiopians have gathered in search of food.

Two Boeing 707 jets have been chartered to carry £900,000 worth of food aid from Amsterdam to the town of Kassala in the next week.

The town is close to one of three refugee camps for Ethiopians who have been fleeing drought and civil war in the provinces of Eritrea and Tigre.

The airlift, which began on Sunday, has been organised by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees after its office in the Sudanese capital of Khartoum said that the situation on the eastern border was reaching disaster proportions.

But UN officials in Geneva stressed yesterday that the airlift of 320 tons of urgently required foodstuffs for the most vulnerable of the famine victims, mostly children, would do little to meet the minimum demand of 5,000 tons a month for the Ethiopian refugees alone.

Mr Michael Barton, the High Commission's spokesman in Geneva, said yesterday: "The numbers of Ethiopians reaching Sudan is rising every day and the brutal fact is that there is not enough food to keep them all alive."

Cholera outbreak

There are now at least 1,050,000 refugees in Sudan made up of 680,000 Ethiopians, 250,000 Ugandans and 120,000 Chadians.

Oxfam has started to fly supplies direct to Kassala. A plane carrying 34 tonnes of high-energy biscuits landed there on Tuesday.

On Sunday the British charity will fly a team of water engineers and drilling equipment to the Kassala and Gedaref border camps to provide sanitation and water for the refugees.

Lack of sanitation has been blamed for an outbreak of cholera in Ethiopia which is killing as many as 60 refugees a day in a famine camp at Harbo in Wollo province 150 miles north-east of Addis Ababa.

There are no reports that the disease has spread to any other of the country's 200 relief centres.

TOP RUSSIAN TRADE TEAM TOURS RUHR

By MICHAEL FARR in Bonn

A HIGH-LEVEL Russian trade delegation yesterday toured North-Rhine Westphalia, West Germany's most populated state which takes in the industrial heartland of the Ruhr.

The programme included visits to Thyssen, Mannesmann and Bayer, the steel and industrial giants, which are hoping to win a share of £5,700 million of orders that Moscow is expected to place in the West under its new Five-Year Plan, which begins next year.

The delegation is travelling around West Germany for the rest of this week after twodays of trade talks in Bonn where both sides agreed to develop economic relations further.

Biggest partner

West Germany is already Russia's biggest trading partner in the West, though a long-standing trade surplus in Bonn's favour has recently been turned to a deficit.

Since new American nuclear missiles began being deployed in West Germany, Moscow has deliberately let relations with Bonn lie fallow, but West German officials were hoping that the new round of trade talks marked part of a general thaw in East-West relations.

SECRET DIRECTORY

Target for spies

West Germany has acquired a secret Russian directory which outlines information on Western technology which Russian agents should seek, according to a Bonn Interior Ministry report.

The red book, similar in appearance to a telephone directory, is entitled "Co-ordinated Demands for Technological Information Tasks." It is believed to be stored under lock and key in Russian diplomatic and trade missions, but is understood to have been obtained by West German counter-intelligence.

MANILA MURDER CHARGE FOR MILITARY CHIEF

Gen Fabian Ver, 55, the Philippines military chief, two other generals and 25 men were charged yesterday in connection with the murder of Benigno Aquino, 17 months after the former Opposition leader was killed at Manila airport.

Ver and eight others were charged as accessories, and 17 more as the principal accused.

Ver, a confidant of President Marcos, and the others were also charged in connection with the killing of Rolando Galman, the man the military said killed Aquino. Galman was shot moments after Aquino was murdered.—Reuter.

Arms freeze 'sacrifice' for Reagan

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

LEADING members of Congress issued warnings yesterday that unless President Reagan agreed to freeze defence spending, his proposals for tackling the budget deficit could collapse.

Senator Bob Packwood, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said there had to be "a sense of shared sacrifice, and defence has to be part of it."

Mr Packwood's comment was prompted by reports that many of his fellow Republicans in the Senate were beginning to realise that Mr Reagan would never agree to a defence freeze.

Senator Barry Goldwater said: "I don't think the freeze is going through."

Last month, Mr Reagan and Mr Weinberger, Defence Secretary, agreed that the proposed increase in 1986 of $30 billion (£27 billion) could be reduced by about $8 billion (£7 billion).

But they refused to consider freezing the military budget at the present level of $284 billion (£252 billion).

An across-the-board freeze on Government spending, excluding defence and social security, is the centrepiece of Mr Reagan's draft budget for Congress early next month.

He is seeking urgently ways of cutting into the huge Federal deficits, which are projected beyond $200 billion (£178 billion) in the coming years.

Reform of tax

The warnings that Mr Reagan must reconsider a freeze on defence outlays came as the Senate Finance Committee questioned Mr James Baker, the former White House Chief of Staff, on his appointment as Treasury Secretary.

Mr Baker told the committee that Mr Reagan had approved budget cuts so far of about $40 billion (£35·5 billion). A further $10 billion (£8·8 billion) would be sought with Congressional participation.

Mr Baker said that there should be a freeze on some programmes, while others would be eliminated completely. He also emphasised that reform of the tax system should be given equal importance.

Dealing with the concern over trade, Mr Baker said that an overriding aim was to avoid a return to the days of protectionism.

Senator Bill Bradley asked him why, in that case, he supported the recent steel import restrictions, duty on imported motor-cycles, and tougher rules for textile imports.

Mr Baker said all of those measures were to counteract unfair trade practices such as dumping and foreign government subsidies.

U.S. price rises held at 4p.c.

By DAVID SHEARS in Washington

CONSUMER prices in the United States rose in 1984 by exactly four per cent., the third year in a row that the inflation rate has been held to a low level.

As recently as 1979 and 1980, the consumer inflation rate was running at around 12-13 per cent.

The startling reduction under the Reagan presidency has been aided by falling oil prices and the strong dollar, which forced domestic producers to hold down prices to compete with cheapened imports.

A surge in growth during the final quarter brought the total increase in the gross national product over the year to 6·8 per cent., the biggest one-year gain since 1951.

Mr Larry Speakes, White House spokesman, boasted: "Inflation at the check-out counter remains low and under control."

Further encouragement came from the money markets, where Treasury bill interest rates fell on Tuesday to their lowest level in two years.

Declining interest rates, low inflation and steady economic growth prompted Wall Street's 34-point boom in share prices on Monday, the day of President eRagan's second inauguration.

30 slip police net in Indian spy swoop

By BALRAM TANDON in New Delhi

INTELLIGENCE and police officials who claim to have cracked one of the biggest spy networks in Indian history were reported yesterday to have failed to track down all the wanted men.

The Press Trust of India, quoting "highly reliable" sources, said that at least 30 people—most of them clerks and personal assistants to senior officials—were missing.

It seems the wide publicity given to cracking the spy ring by Mr Rajiv Gandhi, Prime Minister, last Friday had afforded time for most of those wanted by the police to escape.

When police parties swooped on the homes of the wanted men, they found the doors of their houses locked.

Reports in New Delhi claim at least 1,500 people have been questioned, but the Indian Foreign Ministry categorically denied reports that any of its staff were involved in the spy scandal.

Until Tuesday only nine people had been brought before magistrates and remanded, although Indian news agencies put the number of those being held for questioning at between 50 and 80.

One strange aspect of the case to emerge so far is that most of those involved were at the lower levels of government — clerks and personal assistants.

Two of those produced in the magistrates' court on Tuesday were only upper division clerks. Press Trust of India acknowledged yesterday that most of those reported missing were clerks, stenographers, and personal assistants.

One report said the Indian businessman wh owas the kingpin in the spy network entertained his informants and friends from the diplomatic circle at the Delhi Gymkhana Club.

Mrs Ram Dulari Sinha, Minister of State for Home Affairs, disclosed yesterday that 2,717 were killed during the riots in northern India following the assassination of Mrs Gandhi. The toll was heaviest in Delhi where at least 2,146 died.

Defence visit heralds Delhi diplomatic thaw

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

A VISIT to New Delhi this month by Sir James Blyth, Head of Defence Sales at the Ministry of Defence, is regarded in London as the strongest sign yet that the Indian government has ended the chill it imposed on relations with Britain.

After weeks of silence during which visits by Mr Heseltine, Defence Secretary, and Mr Norman Lamont, Industry Minister, were postponed, Indian defence officials told Sir James only last week that they looked forward to seeing him.

A freeze on government-level trade and defence negotiations with Britain was imposed by New Delhi as a sign of extreme displeasure over the activities of Sikh militants in Britain.

The official reason given for the postponement of the ministerial visits was that Mr Rajiv Gandhi's new government was too busy settling in after the end-of-year elections.

Curbs on Sikhs

Last week Sir Robert Wade-Gery, British High Commissioner in New Delhi, was told by a senior official that Mr Gandhi wanted good, normal relations. It is expected that fresh dates for the ministerial visits will be announced shortly.

However, Indian officials in that enough has been done to London are still not satisfied restrict the activities of Sikh nationalists such as Dr Jagjit Singh Chauhan, president of the so-called Republic of Khalistan, whose offices are in Notting Hill.

The Indians fear that agitation and violent language of the sort that preceded the murder of Mrs Gandhi has only temporarily been toned down. They fear relations could quickly become strained again.

Dr Chauhan is still active. Last week he warned moderate Sikh leaders in India of "very serious consequences if any opportunistic and short-term agreement is reached with the Indian government."

As a result of the underlying tension, the situation could still pose a serious threat to the prospects for Britain winning major defence contracts, in particular one worth more than £700 million for a 155mm gun for the Indian Army. A British-led consortium is a strong contender for the contract.

'ATTEMPT TO KILL POPE' THWARTED

By ROBIN GEDYE in Warsaw

A POLISH Interior Ministry general claimed yesterday that his officers prevented what might have been a possible attempt to assassinate the Pope during his visit to Poland last summer.

General Zenon Platek told the court at the trial of four policemen accused in the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko, a pro-Solidarity priest, that his men had confiscated arms and explosives from several people who had attempted to infiltrate the crowds during the Pope's 12-day tour of Poland.

But a Polish government spokesman, commenting on evidence submitted by General Platek, denied that there had been any assassination attempts.

Speaking of security problems during the papal visit Gen. Platek said: "We had reason to believe that there might have been a coup attempt against the Pope."

It appeared to observers that he may have been attempting to prove the zeal of the officers under his charge and refute suggestions that he had failed to exercise proper control over his men.

He was dismissed from his post as head of the Interior Ministry's department charged with monitoring church affairs at the start of investigations into the death of Father Popieluszko.

FRANCE EXPELS POLISH ENVOY

By Our Staff Correspondent in Paris

Mr Stanislaw Janczak, 33, third secretary in charge of protocol at the Polish Embassy in Paris, has been declared persona non grata and expelled from France.

Sources close to the French counter-intelligence agency said Janczak was arrested on January 7 in a Paris street after he had met a Polish immigrant who had handed him some documents. These apparently concerned the Solidarity trade union's Paris co-ordinating committee.

UPROAR IN FRENCH ASSEMBLY

By MICHAEL FIELD in Paris

A SPECIAL session of the French National Assembly had to be suspended briefly last night after objections were raised to the presence in the visitors' Gallery of Mr Jean-Marie Tjibaou, the pro-independence Melanesian leader.

The Deputies had been summoned to debate a government motion extending the state of emergency in New Caledonia to June 30.

However the tension was evident from the outset when M. Claude Labbe, leader of the neo-Gaullist (R P R) Opposion, objected to the presence in the Visitors' Gallery of M. Tjibaou.

The presence of a man who had taken up a position outside the Republic and its laws was "intolerable," said M. Labbe. "We refuse to sit in such conditions."

Cries of 'racialist'

Cries of "racialist" came at once from the Communist benches and protests from all over the House.

M. Tjibaou, leader of the Kanak Socialist Liberation Front and head of its self-styled pprovisional government of Kanay, left the Assembly, saying only "I did not realise our presence was so important."

The session was suspended for five minutes after the incident.

The neo-Gaullists and the Communists have said already that they will vote against prolonging the emergency, although each for different reasons. The Giscardians will abstain.

In Noumea, capital of the troubled French territory, M. Edgar Pisani, government delegate, stressed again the need of continuing the emergency to stop the "vertigo of violence" after more acts or sabotage were reported yesterday morning.

The sabotage, at the Kouaoua mine, is the second attack on New Caledonia's main wealth within a few days. It defies President Mitterrand's wish to stimulate flagging economic activity in the island by reopening nickel mines closed in recent weeks.

M. Pisani said, in a broadcast over the French Overseas Radio in Noumea, that the destruction at Kouaoua Mine would not paralyse mining activity. A plan was already operating to restart production.

Last week seven 45-ton lorries and other equipment were destroyed at one of th eThio mines and yesterday morning, employees of the Societe le Nickel (S L N), the island's biggest produced, found 90 per cent. of their vehicles sabotaged.

'Work of commandos'

M. Jacques Barisain, managing director of S L N, said the sabotage was the work "of a well-organised commando that knew the place and the equipment."

M. Pisani said it would be premature to blame the destruction at the two mines on the same people. The methods were different.

The Thio affair was generally thought to be the work of Right-wing Caldoche extremists, and the F L N K S (liberation front) has denied all part in it.

By last night, however, the Kanak military group had made no comment on the Kouaoua affair, saying it needed to check further.

Meanwhile in a radio interview yesterday, M. Tjibaou said he was in favour of "collecting up the guns" in the island, and that his group were "in favour of dialogue. We are men of peace."

But the French Press was shrill in its denuciation of the Melanesian leader's determination to fight for independence.

NATO GENERALS MEET IN SECRET

A secret meeting of 150 senior Nato generals has been held in Copenhagen over the past two days to discuss national defence plans and their integration into the common Nato overall defence.

The meeting was not made public until it was almost over for fear of a terrorist attack which, if successful, would have deprived Nato countries of their most senior officers.

Little hope for end to tension over Falkland Islands

By TONY ALLEN-MILLS in Buenos Aires

ARGENTINA'S continuing readiness to turn every minor disagreement with Britain into a major mud-slinging row holds out little hope that any progress will be made on the Falklands question in 1985, according to diplomatic and political sources in Buenos Aires.

British officials believe there is still room to manœuvre if only Argentina was prepared to tackle one problem at a time and not insist on linking even the most bureaucratic detail to the sovereignty issue.

It would be of advantage to both sides, for example, to reach agreement on the absurd and petty delays in granting visas.

The lifting of trade embargoes and financial restrictions could also be concluded with minimum political fuss.

But Argentine officialdom has failed to grasp the nettle. Policy statements emanating from the Foreign Ministry are confused and often conflicting. The impression left on neutral observers is that no one really knows what the official policy is and no-one is prepared to stick their neck out.

Senor Dante Caputo, the Foreign Minister, has at times seemed receptive to rationalisation of Anglo-Argentine contacts, but after the row over oil prospecting, for example, there were Right-wing calls for his resignation on the grounds that he had "betrayed the motherland." Within hours, the Foreign Ministry was spewing out statements of anti-British abuse.

Prospecting rights

The year has already got off to a hostile and unpromising start, with official Argentine complaints, and a few well-chosen insults about Mrs Thatcher's Christmas message to the Falkland Islanders.

There was also an extraordinary fuss over the discovery in Buenos Airfes, six months after the pact, that a small British oil company had been granted prospecting rights in the Falklands.

Although the deal was announced in the House of Commons last July, it seemed that Argentine officials only learned of it after Christmas. The ensuing row was so deliberately stage-managed by sections of the Argentine Foreign Ministry that diplomats and other observers see nothing but trouble ahead this year.

Most sources here agreed that the ignominious collapse of the Berne talks between British and Argentine officials last year effectively torpedoed hopes of serious bilateral negotiations for the indefinite future.

Only the highly-unlikely prospect of an about-face by Mrs Thatcher, or an equally improbable reverse on the sovereignty issue by the Argentines, would improve the climate for talks.

What worries diplomats most is that in the coming year of economic crisis, President Alfonsin will be tempted to adopt what might be described as the "Galtieri gambit" and seek confrontation with Britain to distract attention from his domestic problems.

In Mr Alfonsin's case, this would certainly not amount to military aggression. But he could easily keep up a barrage of complaints in the United Nations and elsewhere about colonialist oppression, fishing rights, oil prospecting, Antarctic exploration and anything else that came to mind.

A senior Argentine businessman who advises Senor Alfonsin on foreign affairs, told me this week he thought the President would resist such diversionary tactics. "I think he's alert to the dangers. But the economy is going to cause him acute problems, and the temptation is certainly there," he said.

The other troublesome factor in the Falklands equation is the Argentine military. Ravaged by budgetary cuts, pursued through the courts for human rights abuses and Falklands incompetence, the generals have little to look forward to in 1985.

State of tension

Now that agreement has been reached with Chile over the Beagle Channel dispute, and the military's assistance in running the country is no longer required, conflict over the Falklands is practically their only raison d'etre.

Both Argentine and diplomatic sources suspect that the military will do its best to maintain a state of tension in the South Atlantic to preserve their forces intact and resist civilian demands for further defence budget cuts.

With Argentina's economy in danger of collapse, the Falkland Islands are hardly going to be at the top of President Alfonsin's agenda this year.

The desperate need for unpopular economic measures such as wage controls and tax increases may well dissuade him from risking any form of Falklands initiative that would provide ammunition for his enemies.

The pressures facing the Argentine leadership unhappily suggest a tense and difficult year for the Falkland Islands.

Peronists face long road back to power

By TONY ALLEN-MILLS in Buenos Aires

ARGENTINA'S Peronist movement, like the British Labour party, is finding that life in opposition leads to disillusion, disruptive factional feuding, and sharply diminished prospects of an eventual return to glory.

Argentine politicians are notoriously prone to bouts of internecine strife, but in recent months Peronist leaders have plumbed new depths of discord.

The party, founded 40 years ago by General Juan Peron, the late dictator, is today a shambles facing the prospect of extinction. Like the British Labour Party, it is split into warring factions that spend more time sniping at each other than at the common foe—President Alfonsin's ruling Radical Party.

But unlike the British Opposition, there is no party manifesto, no Socialist philosophy, no common dogma that might at least provide a basis for a future reconciliation. Today's Peronists cannot even agree on a definition of Peronism.

Nor is there a young and charismatic Kinnock-style leader on whom hopes of unity might be pinned.

The closest the Peronists come to a leader is Senora Isabel Peron, widow of the General, but now a sad and eccentric figure who is baffling the Argentine political world by steadfastly closeting herself 5,000 miles away at her home in Madrid.

Clasping hands

All this is in dramatic contrast to the picture six months ago when, despite their election defeat, the Peronists were still being talked of as a vital force in the rebuilding of Argentine democracy.

Last May, newspapers around the world carried pictures of Senora Peron clasping hands with President Alfonsin amid fevered speculation that she would return to Argentina from exile to heal the Peronists' wounds and co-operate in the banishing of the military for good.

But, after a few heady weeks of contempt and consensus, the cracks began to appear in the Peronist party. Senora Peron returned to Spain, apparently satisfied that her reputation had been restored and no more was required of her. Despite her party's steady descent towards ruin, she has not been heard from since.

The power vacuum at the top of the party produced inevitable clashes but eventually climaxed in a formal split. A party congress at the Odeon theatre in Buenos Aires staged the typically Peronist spectacle of one leadership faction railroading resolutions through debate while teams of bully-boys roamed the theatre thumping dissidents.

Final demise

Proceedings became so farcical that hundreds of angry delegates marched out and announced plans to hold their own congress, due to take place next month.

With the gap between the main factions now apparently irreconcilable, and neither side sure about its own political direction, the next logical step is the Peronists' final demise. All that may be left will be a hard-line rump with minimal popular support.

To many Argentine political observers, the collapse of Peronism was historically inevitable. The party never had a coherent philosophy, not least because General Peron was always careful not to formulate a manifesto for fear it might be used in evidence against him when he performed one of his plentiful policy U-turns.

Peronism represented not so much a strategy for social progress as a vague yearning for a Utopian Argentina where everyone was comfortable and wore the national flag in their lapel.

NO TRIADS LINK WITH CHINESE IN BRITAIN, SAY MPs

By KENNETH CLARKE

ONE of the "myths" from which Britain's Chinese community has suffered is of links with organised crime, orchestrated from Hongkong, according to a report by the House of Commons Home Affairs Committee, published yesterday.

The all-party committee states: "The myth flourishes despite the absence of any evidence whatever to sustain it. It is true, of course, that any Chinese criminals in Britain are likely to have contacts in Hongkong.

"Most of the immigration from Hongkong has been too recent for any other situation to exist.

But no one was able to provide us with any evidence, or even reasonable suspicion, of links between criminal activities or organisations in Britain and Hongkong and Macao."

The report says evidence from the Metropolitan Police shows that despite "unsubstantiated and speculative" reports, there is no evidence that any known, organised gangs of Triads in London's "China Town" have criminal links with members in Hongkong.

Advice from the Royal Hongkong police was that they had no evidence of criminal links between Hongkong and Britain, "except in what remains of the drug trade," which was international.

Known feuds

The committee finds that the main activity of Chinese gangs in Britain appears to be extortion and robbery. This problem must be taken seriously—and there is increasing involvement of "Vietnamese criminals and young Chinese."

This reference to Vietnamese apparently concerns known feuds, which have led to a number of deaths, between Vietnamese and Chinese involved in gambling dens.

The report deals, also, with gambling and states that "another stereotype" about the Chinese is that they are inveterate gamblers and it finds that gambling is more prevalent among them than among the general population.

Chinese sources suggested that gambling was more popular among older, less-educated catering workers and young men without families.

Illegal clubs provided a "Chinese atmosphere" and a clientele not otherwise available. The committee has recommended that the Gaming Board should keep a close watch on attempts by casinos to attract Chinese custom.

In its introduction, the report describes the Chinese as having had little contact with "the wider society," and wanting to keep a low profile.

"They are regarded, rightly, as hard-working and law abiding. They have rarely made complaints about any aspect of their lives in Britain, and have made few calls on social services or other forms of assistance, so it has been assumed that they have few problems."

But the lack of "official or public perception" of problems does not mean they do not exist. Britain's third largest ethnic minority does have serious difficulties, which need measures to deal with them.

The greatest value of the inquiry is said to be making better understood Chinese culture and lifestyle in Britain. Employment remains, at about 90 per cent, predominantly in catering.

Underlying problems identified by the report put difficulty with the English language as the most important.

Lack of English is said to be the chief cause of the second underlying problem—ignorance of British law and welfare services.

Another problem, says the report, involves "cultural characteristics," especially the preference for self-help and mutual aid and a reluctance to complain.

BBC series for Chinese 'a coup'

By HARVEY LEE
Television Staff

A SERIES to teach English to millions of television viewers in Hongkong and mainland China is regarded as a diplomatic coup by BBC External Services.

The £600,000 production costs of the 20-part series will be met in full by a grant from the Hongkong-based Croucher Educational Foundation. Its chairman is Lord Todd, the British Nobel Prize-winning scientist.

The series is to be screened before the end of next year and is aimed at Chinese-speaking students of science, technology and medicine.

It will be made in both Mandarin and Cantonese, the predominant dialects of China and Hongkong.

Marriage proposals

The Chinese approached the BBC because they were impressed by the phenomenal success of "Follow Me", an earlier series made by the English by Television branch of External Services.

It is still being repeated on Chinese television after four years, and made a star of its presenter, Kathy Flower, a British Council teacher, who was showered by hundreds of marriage proposals from captivated viewers.

Miss Flower, 32, will present the new series, to be co-produced with China Central Television.

Mr Austen Kark, managing director of BBC External Services, said: "This is an impressive coup for BBC External Services and for Britain."

Kathy Flower whose English by Television series made her a star in China — and brought her hundreds of marriage proposals from delighted fans.

RETURN TO INDIA FOR PRINCESS

By JENNY SHIELDS

PRINCESS ANNE is to return to India next month to complete her tour of Save the Children Fund projects which was cut short following Mrs Gandhi's assassination last October.

The Princess, who is president of the fund, was in the old hill station town of Mussoorie on the third day of her two-week visit when she heard of the Prime Minister's murder

She returned immediately to New Delhi and the rest of the tour was cancelled. The day after Mrs Gandhi's funeral, Princess Anne returned to London, but it was clear that she wished to resume her visit as soon as diplomatically possible.

Mother Teresa visit

The Princess, 34, will start her tour on Feb. 19 in Calcutta, where she will see Mother Teresa's work in the city's slums.

From there she is expected to continue down India's east coast, visiting Bhubaneswar, Gopalpur, Madras, and other cities. The visit will end in New Delhi, where she is likely to pay a courtesy call on Mr Rajiv Gandhi, the new Prime Minister.

Princess Anne's visit will be the first by a major British public figure since the Indian elections.

ROYAL VISIT

The Prince of Wales, Colonel-in-Chief of The Parachute Regiment, will visit the First Battalion on exercise in Norway on February 21 and 22, Buckingham Palace announced yesterday.

Diplomatic bags 'should be scanned'

By JOHN BULLOCH Diplomatic Staff

AN all-party group of MPs yesterday recommended that diplomatic bags arriving at embassies in London should be electronically scanned if there were suspicions about their contents.

The group also advised that other bags should be weighed and measured, and criticised the Foreign Office for events before the Libyan Embassy siege.

The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Commons said it accepted the Government's view that it was legal to scan diplomatic bags by electronic means on occasion, but said this practice was often ineffective.

Members said there was also the risk that other countries would use the same means to investigate British diplomatic bags. This could lead to them gaining details of cipher machines.

Human life

The committee was considering diplomatic privilege following the St James Square siege when WPc Yvonne Fletcher was killed by shots fired from the Libyan Embassy. The attempted abduction of Mr Umaru Dikko, the Nigerian businessman, was also considered.

In its report, the committee praised the Government for what it called its "swift and robust" handling of the Dikko affair. It also welcomed an assurance from the Foreign Secretary that the inviolability of the diplomatic bag could not take precedence over human life.

But the committee found the Foreign Office at fault in its handling of the situation at the Libyan Embassy before the event.

Sir Anthony Kershaw, chairman, noted that at one time the number of diplomats there reached 55.

The Government should be more ready to limit the size of missions.

Sir Anthony said that missions in London accumulated 71,000 unpaid parking tickets a year, and there was on average one crime a week committed by one of the 15,000 people in London with diplomatic immunity which would attract a sentence of at least six months.

Execution fears for Hongkong Triads

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

HONGKONG'S 33 Triad societies, with a total membership of about 120,000, are thought to be growing increasingly anxious about the future of their gangster operations under Chinese Communist rule after 1997.

President Reagan's Commission on International Crime has heard evidence of growing Triad emigration to the United States. It was claimed that Triad bosses from Toronto, Boston, San Francisco and Los Angeles held a recent "crime summit" in Hongkong to co-ordinate a phased withdrawal.

There is no doubt that Peking will carry out a scourge of the gangs, probably through an initial rash of executions.

Officials of the newly-formed Interpol bureau in Peking are already convinced that Triads from Hongkong are using connections in Canton to move heroin through China to Europe and America.

It is thought that Triads are taking advantage of the fact that ships and planes from the mainland, where narcotics are hardly used, are not watched as carefully by drug enforcement agencies as transportation and travellers from elsewhere in Asia.

As a multi-national organisation, Triads working out of Hongkong and Taiwan are now responsible for at least a fifth of the heroin entering America, according to Mr William French Smith, the Attorney General.

With yet another bumper crop of opium in the Golden Triangle of Burma, Laos and Thailand, heroin, the only drug Triads deal in, remains the most lucrative business for the Hongkong gangs.

Recently Taiwan's main Triad society, the Bamboo Union, re-emerged in the colony. It is suspected of involvement in a drug operation that was smashed in Taipei yesterday.

Police arrested 21 people, among them Hongkong Chinese who, officers said, used tourist and business visas to smuggle in huge amounts of drugs in special suitcases.

Giant balloons at sea foil Iraqi Exocets

By JOHN PETTY Shipping Correspondent

EXOCET missiles are being fooled by a simple defence system being tried by the Iranians after a spate of successful attacks by Iraqi aircraft last month on tankers using the Kharg Island oil terminal.

The French-built radar-guided missiles, which did so much damage in the Falklands conflict, are now blowing up giant balloons towed behind barges instead of wreaking havoc on shipping.

The rockets are fired from long range and lock-on by radar beam to large targets. The missile, however, cannot distinguish between giant balloons and tankers.

Tanker after tanker was hit last month as Iraq stepped up attacks on international shipping to try to stop Iran exporting oil.

Four ships hit

But this month only four ships have been hit, despite almost daily claims by Iraq that "large naval targets" have been damaged. And one of them was just a 100-ton offshore supply ship.

The rest of the "targets" appear to have been the balloons.

Last year a total of 67 ships were hit by missiles in the Iran-Iraq war, according to the Institute of London Underwriters. The biggest onslaught was in December, when the 386,000-ton Minotaur, a Cypriot tanker, was severely damaged.

ANGER OVER EURO-STAMP

By ALAN OSBORN
Common Market Correspondent in Brussels

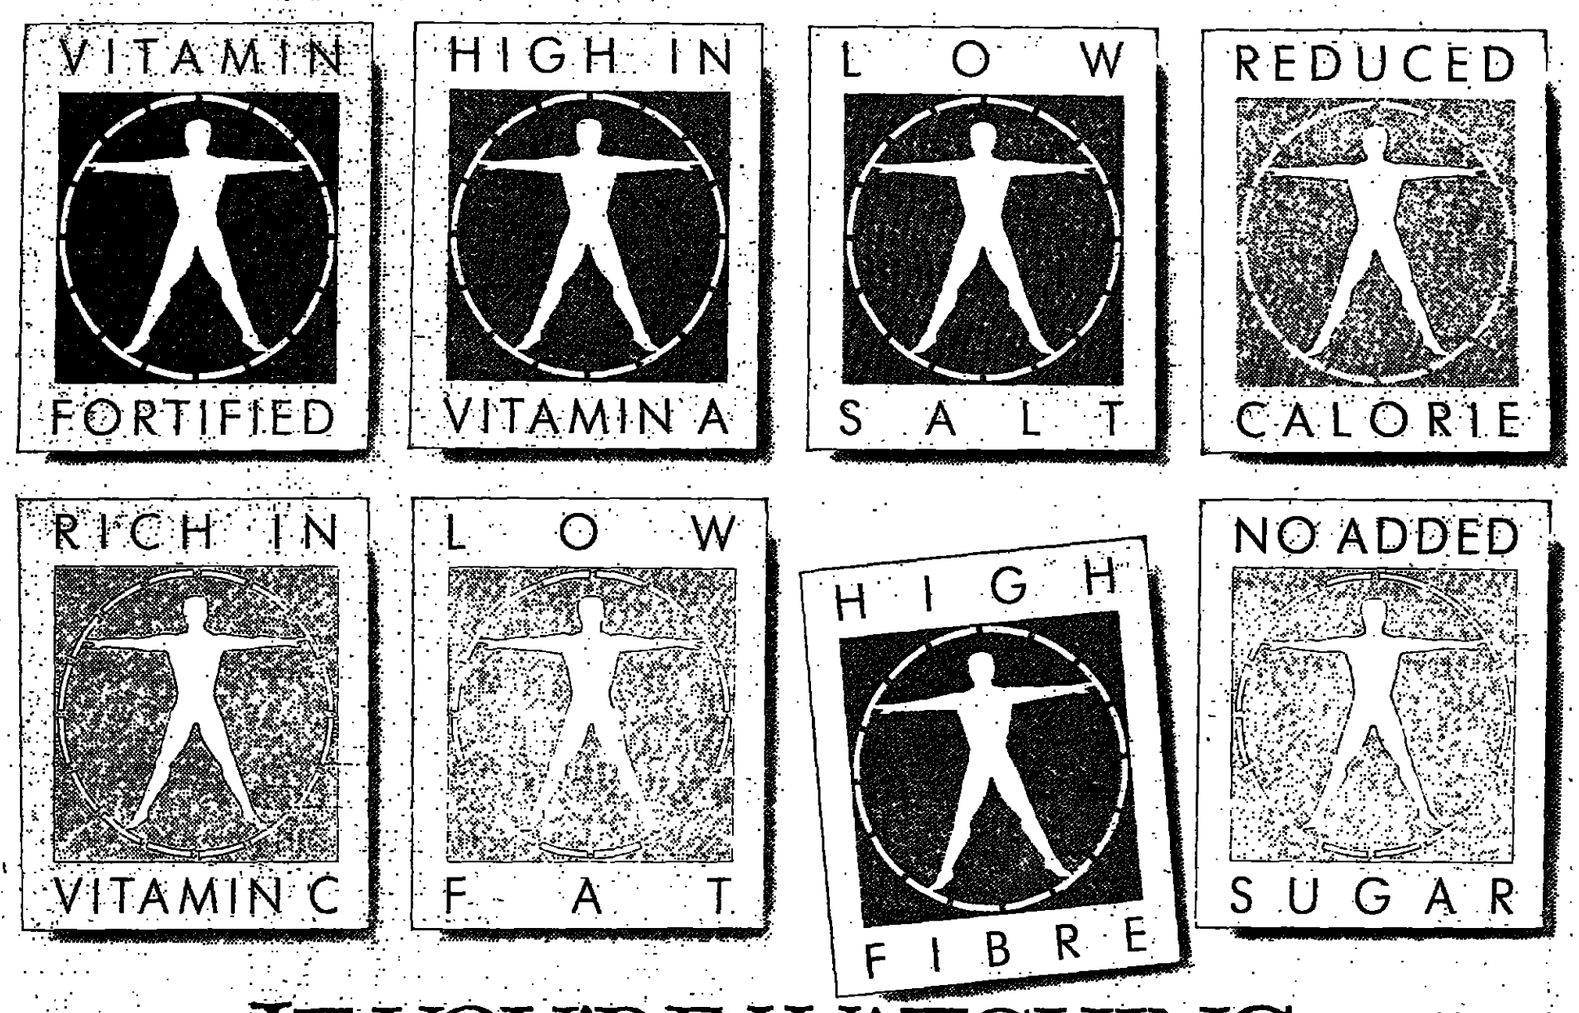
SOCIALIST members of the European Parliament yesterday reacted angrily to suggestions that there should be a single postage stamp for Europe.

The West Merseyside member, Mr Les Huckfield, said: "I'm going to tell them where they can stick their stamps."

"Getting rid of the Queen from British postage stamps will reinforce the strong feeling of the vast majority of the people of Britain who are totally opposed to our membership of the Common Market."

Mr Alf Jones, deputy Labour leader in the Parliament, said: "This is another example of Euro-fanatics dreaming up crackpot schemes

The idea of a single postage stamp for carriage anywhere in the EEC was put forward by Mr David Williamson, British member of the "People's Europe" committee which tries to make the Common Market more acceptable



IF YOU'RE WATCHING WHAT YOU EAT LOOK FOR OUR LABELS.

We're aware that people are wanting to move towards a healthier way of eating.

The problem they face is knowing what foods contain so that they can make a choice.

That's why we've started our healthy eating programme.

We're introducing the symbols you see above onto Tesco brand products that have a particular health benefit.

The products they'll be featured on won't just be so called "Health food."

They'll be on the things you buy every week, like baked beans, breakfast cereals, yogurt, bread and frozen food.

Because eating healthily isn't about making major changes.

It's more about striking the right balance in what you eat.

Most doctors agree we should choose a diet which reduces the amount of fat, salt and sugar we eat and increases the amount of fibre.

Which is why we are introducing a nutrition panel like the one you see above onto all Tesco brand products.

NUTRITION
Baked Beans are extremely high in dietary fibre and contain less than 1.5g of fat per serving.

AVERAGE COMPOSITION	PER 140g (5oz) serving	PER 100g (3½oz)
Energy	553kJ/132kcal	394kJ/94kcal
Fat	0.7g	0.5g
Protein	7.0g	5.0g
Carbohydrate	25.2g	18.0g

ROLLS SHARES £110m ORDER FOR AIRBUS

By Air Cdre C. S. COOPER Air Correspondent

PAN AM has chosen the five-nation V2500 engine to power its Airbus Industrie A320 aircraft, at last giving Rolls-Royce the chance to join the European Airbus programme.

The engine order for Pan Am's 16 A320s will be worth £110 million, excluding spare parts. The airline has options on a further 34 A320s with V2500 engines.

Rolls-Royce is playing a major role in the design, development and manufacture of the engine, a 25,000lb thrust turbofan that shows promise of being much cheaper to run than its nearest competitor.

The V2500 was launched last year by International Aero Engines, a joint venture between companies in Britain, America, Japan, Germany and Italy.

The Government gave Rolls-Royce a grant of £60 million in May to enable the State-owned company to join the project as a major partner, with the A320 programme in mind. The aid is to be repaid through a levy on sales.

30 p.c. share

Rolls-Royce and Pratt and Whitney of America both have 30 per cent. of the workshare. The Japanese Aero Engines Corporation has 23 per cent., M T U of West Germany 11 per cent., and Fiat Aviazione of Italy six per cent.

Mr Robert Rosati, president and chief executive officer of International Aero Engines, said in New York yesterday that the company saw a demand over the next 15 years for £25 billion worth of engines for the A320 and similar airliners from McDonnell Douglas and Boeing.

"We believe V2500 orders will grow steadily to meet this need and that we will capture a very significant part of the market."

Pan Am, he said, had made a most thorough evaluation of the A320 with the V2500 engine.

Leasing deal

Pan Am's order for 16 144-seat A320s was part of a £1 billion deal announced last September. The airline ordered 12 A310s as well as the A320s for delivery between mid-1987 and 1990.

Meanwhile, Pan Am is leasing 12 A300s and four A310s, the first of which are already in service.

The A320s will be used on Pan Am's American feeder network, its routes into West Berlin and services between European cities.

Pan Am was the first American airline to select the A320 and is the launch customer for the V2500 engine.

MERIT RISES PLAN FOR AIR STAFF

By Our Business Correspondent

PERFORMANCE-related salary rises are being planned for top management by the Civil Aviation Authority as part of a programme of pay reforms aimed at breaking away from the Civil Service structure.

Mr Jim Curle, managing director of the state-run authority, has told unions that a new pay and staffing structure is needed for the 7,000 staff because the old Civil Service system is no longer appropriate.

But the authority still plans to tie annual increases in basic pay to the average Civil Service settlement. "We cannot give any details until we have concluded negotiations with the unions," a spokesman said yesterday.

Grades abolished

Under the reforms, senior management grades would be abolished. Each job would have a salary bracket and provision for performance-based increases.

It is also planned to introduce merit rises for a new grading of management, professional and technical staff. Some clerical and support staff would also benefit from merit rises, while others would be tied to regular increments.

Mr Bill Brett, assistant general secretary of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants, says the changes would destroy the security and guarantees which formed part of the contract signed by members when they left the Civil Service to join the authority in the early 1970s.

The Institution has set up a working party to consider the proposals. The group has already made it clear it opposes any move away from an increment linked structure.

A third of the authority's staff at present are on salaries of between £5,000 to £7,500 a year. Clerical grades pay ranges between £4,800 to £6,400.

At the other end of the scale air traffic control officers earn between £8,900 to £16,400 and air traffic engineers £9,300 to £12,000.

Judicial review appeal system may change

By TERENCE SHAW Legal Correspondent

AN alternative form of appeal for those refused leave to bring judicial review proceedings in the High Court challenging the legality of administrative decisions of Ministers, Government departments or local and public authorities is being considered by the Government.

This follows strong criticism from judges and other lawyers of a proposal in its Administration of Justice Bill, now before Parliament, that would remove the existing right of the citizen to appeal to the Court of Appeal against a judge's refusal to allow him to bring judicial review proceedings.

Pressure of work facing the Court of Appeal has led the Government to seek to remove this right of appeal in the Bill.

But the strength of opposition to removal of the basic right of appeal has led Lord Hailsham, the Lord Chancellor, to consider possible alternative means of reviewing refusals.

Strongest challengers

Although the proposed abolition is believed to have the support of Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls and senior judge in the Court of Appeal, the proposal was criticised this week by other judges of the court.

In a reserved judgment on Tuesday, Lord Justice Ackner, sitting with Lord Justice Slade and Lord Justice Purchas, said they were "troubled" to find that Clause 43 of the Bill removed the right to renew a refusal of leave before the Court of Appeal.

Allowing an appeal against the refusal by two separate High Court judges to grant leave for judicial review in a tax case, Lord Justice Ackner said the case demonstrated very strongly the merits of the present rules.

2 JAILED FOR 'HOMES IN SUN' FRAUD

TWO "ruthless" businessmen jailed yesterday over a Spanish villas fraud were said by Judge JAMES RANT, Q.C. to have "played on the dreams of people wanting holiday homes in the sun."

GEORGE DESMOND, 43, of Roman Road, Mountnessing, Essex, and EMRYS WILLIAMS, 42, of Hall Farm Road, Benfleet, were convicted at Chelmsford Crown Court of conspiring to obtain cheques and money by deception.

Desmond was jailed for three years and Williams said to be his subordinate, to two years.

Mr HUBERT DUNNE, prosecuting, said the two men ran a company called Firstline Ltd. which – advertised holiday chalets on the Costa Dorada.

Forty clients paid £7,000 each for villas at Mare Nostrum, near Barcelona, but the site had no water, no drainage and no electricity. The chalets could only be used as store sheds.

Mr Dunne said 60 Firstline clients who bought villas on another site at Camping Sitges were misled into believing they had a lifelong lease when in fact the company had only a three-year lease.

DESMOND, giving evidence, said that when he took over the Camping Sitges site there was a three-year lease but he understood it would be constantly renewable.

When he acquired the Mare Nostrum site he was let down by his Spanish agent who took his money and failed to apply for planning permission.

Desmond said he was confident that planning consent would be forthcoming eventually

PENSIONERS KILLED

Mr George Bushell, 87, his sister Mrs Sophie Pink, 84, and Mrs Ida Coles, 90, all from Ethelburt Avenue, Swaythling, Southampton, were killed when their car swerved and crashed into a shop window in Southampton. It is thought Mr Bushell, the driver, had a heart attack.

A warm smile from the Duchess of Kent against a chilly background in Lisburn yesterday.

SEVEN ON LABOUR SHORTLIST

By Our Political Staff

THE final choice of a new Labour party General Secretary to succeed Mr James Mortimer will be made next Wednesday from a shortlist of seven, the party's National Executive decided yesterday.

The four most likely candidates, headed by Mr Larry Whitty, Secretary of Trade Unions for a Labour Victory, were joined on the final shortlist yesterday by two senior local government officers and the party's Scottish organiser.

Mr Whitty, 41, research officer of the General, Municipal, Boilermakers' and Allied Trades' Union, has Mr Kinnock's backing and is generally reckoned to be clear favourite.

Judges' criticism

His strongest challenger is Mrs Helen Liddell, 34, Scottish Secretary of the party and formerly an economist with the Scottish T U C and the B B C in Scotland.

The rest of the short list is: Mrs Joyce Gould, 52, Labour's Assistant National Agent; Mr Roger Ward, 37, a full-time official of the managerial union A S T M S; Mr James Allison, 56, Scottish organiser of the party (with different responsibilities to those of Mrs Liddell); Mr Subhail Aziz, 47, head of Lewisham Borough Council's Employment and Economic Division; and Mr Harold Timworth, 36, head of corporate planning with Havering Borough Council.

Whoever is chosen will take over from Mr Mortimer in the spring when he retires aged 64.

SEVEN CLEARED OF PERFUME CHARGES

Conspiracy charges against seven people charged over an alleged £2 million fake perfume racket were withdrawn yesterday after Horseferry Road court was told the Director of Public Prosecutions had decided there was insufficient evidence against them.

But five other men arrested after police raided a factory unit at the Trinity Business Centre, Rotherhithe, and seized perfume making machines, bottles and other materials, were further remanded on bail until Feb. 28.

In court were: Anthony May, 47, a roofing contractor, of Lymington Avenue, Wood Green; James Coles, 39, unemployed, of St Stephen's Road, Bow; Stephen Jory, 34, a market trader, of Morning Lane, Hackney; Roy Pain, 33, an accountant, of Flordanshire Lane, Cholesbury, Hertfordshire; and David Dunham, 34, a toolmaker, of Mosbourne Close, Aylesbury, Bucks, who are charged with conspiring to defraud people by making false claims that a perfume was made by Yves St Laurent.

Cleared of the same charge were: Davidas Kachula, 36, typesetter, of Arden Avenue, Ilford; Miss Ronna Freeman, 37, unemployed, her mother, Vera, 38, also unemployed, both of Amhurst Road, Hackney; Henrietta Turner, 44, unemployed, of Approach Road, Bethnal Green; Julia Cantead, 48, housewife, of Great Percy Street, Finsbury; John Ward, 35, a steel erector, of Balfern Path, Hackney; and Bernard Sweeney, 38, of Broomhill Drive, Glasgow.

PETTY OFFICER BRAWLED OVER MESS CLOTHING

A petty officer who thrust a beer glass into the face of a mess social secretary was yesterday sentenced to three months' detention, derating and loss of good conduct badges by a court martial at Portsmouth. Sentence is subject to confirmation.

Anthony Hobson, 28, based at Portland, Dorset, denied wounding with intent to cause grievous bodily harm but was found guilty of unlawful and malicious wounding.

The court martial heard that a brawl between Hobson and Petty Officer Eric Vascie followed Hobson being asked to leave the mess at the Navy's mechanical training school at trousers which were thought inappropriate at a mess function.

'Kerry babies' ordeal causes public outcry

By A. J. McILROY

MR MICHAEL NOONAN, Eire Minister for Justice, was under increasing public pressure last night to end "once and for all" the ordeal of a mother at the centre of what has become known as "the Kerry babies case."

Police had alleged that Miss Joanne Hayes, 25, gave birth to twin boys by separate fathers then starved one baby to death and abandoned the other after it died at birth.

The charges were dropped, but not before Miss Hayes and members of her family had protested publicly that they had been "slapped, abused and threatened" into confessing to the murder and concealment of a baby found last April on a remote beach near Cahirciveen, Co. Kerry, with 28 stab wounds.

After an inconclusive internal police inquiry, Mr Noonan bowed to public pressure and ordered a tribunal of inquiry.

The inquiry has led to further outcry and plans by Irish womens' groups to join neighbours and friends of the Hayes family in a protest march today outside the public hearing in Tralee.

Reduced to tears

After five days in the inquiry witness box Miss Hayes was reduced to tears by the persistence and personal nature of the questioning by Mr Martin Kennedy, senior counsel representing three police superintendents involved in the hearings.

The conduct of the murder squad detectives was first brought into question in October when Miss Hayes insisted that she was forced to confess to the killing of a baby which she said was wrongly identified as her own child.

A public outcry followed Dublin newspaper reports of claims by Miss Hayes and members of her family that while detained by the police they were forced to make confessions.

The police perisisted in trying to prosecute Miss Hayes, her brother and two sisters for the murder and concealment of the stabbed baby. But all charges were dropped on the intervention of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Arrested family

After the stabbed baby was found, police established that Miss Hayes had attended a hospital for post-natal treatment, but had no baby to account for it.

A fortnight later, police called at a sports complex where Miss Hayes worked as a receptionist and took her to the local station for questioning. They went later to her home and brought in her two brothers, a sister and aunt.

Miss Hayes said that she denied all knowledge of the stabbed baby but agreed that she had given birth to a son on the family farm in April. She said that she put the baby in a bag and dropped it into a pond on the farm.

Some 12 hours later the police had secured statements from the Hayes family confessing to the murder of the stabbed baby. Miss Hayes was charged with murder, and her sister, brothers and aunt were charged with concealing the death.

But blood tests showed that the stabbed baby was group A, while Miss Hayes and a lover, said to be the father, were both group O.

Miss Hayes had insisted all along that she had disposed of her baby in a pond on the family farm. Police decided to drag the pond and found the body.

Police then claimed that Miss Hayes must have had sex within 48 hours with two men and become pregnant by both, giving birth to one baby by each.

Medical evidence at the hearing suggested that this was possible, but extremely unlikely.

ELECTRIC DEAL

Balfour Beatty has won the first big contract in the £546 million British Rail scheme to electrify the East Coast main line from London to Leeds, Newcastle and Edinburgh.

BUS FIRMS HURT BY COWBOY TAG

By Our Transport Correspondent

OWNERS of 30,000 privately-owned buses have written to the Transport Department objecting to allegations that many of them are "cowboys operating unsafe vehicles."

The Bus and Coach Council said the smear was being spread by opponents of Government plans to end many controls over the operation of local bus services.

"Private operators run more than 40 per cent. of all public service vehicles in the country and have an excellent safety record," said Mr Ron Whittle, former president of the council.

Stricter safety

"Mile for mile you are far less likely to be hurt travelling in a bus or coach than you are in a private car."

But the council seeks stricter safety standards in its response to a consultation paper by Mr Ridley, Transport Secretary, which forms the basis of a Bus Bill about to be introduced.

While agreeing with many of Mr Ridley's plans, it fears there will be closure ahead for many *rural routes which are now sub*sidised out of profitable town routes.

HIGHLAND 'TON'

By Our Transport Correspondent

Track improvements are allowing express trains to run at 100 m.p.h. in parts of the Highlands for the first time. The Chieftain from King's Cross to Inverness is the pacesetter, achieving "the ton" between Kingussie and Kincraig. Previously there was a 75 m.p.h. limit.

DUCHESS BRAVES BLIZZARD

By Our Shipping Correspondent

A BULLET-PROOF car escorted by police took the Duchess of Kent across Northern Ireland yesterday to launch a ship after her helicopter was grounded by a blizzard.

She was cheered by workers at the Harland and Wolff shipyard in Belfast after her journey from Lisburn, County Antrim.

The ship was the English Star, 19,300 tons, the first of four refrigerated cargo liners in a £75 million order by Blue Star Line which has kept the yard alive. However, the ship suffered a serious setback with a £1 million fire in the engine room which will delay completion by several months.

Most successful

Harland and Wolff is the most successful merchant shipyard in Britain. It is not part of British Shipbuilders, but is State owned via the Northern Ireland Department of Commerce.

Before returning to London, the Duchess presented medals to men who have served in the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the last 15 years.

During her stay, her third since 1978, she also met several young people in educational groups.

The visit began on Tuesday when the Duchess met the Secretary of State, Mr Hurd, and political and security figures.

BUILDING PLAN FOR SNOW HILL

By Our Transport Correspondent

Commercial property development will help British Rail build the new Snow Hill Station in Birmingham, with two office blocks to be opened on the site this year.

Snow Hill used to be one of Birmingham's two main stations, but was closed and the line severed at Moor Street several years ago when Birmingham New Street Station was rebuilt. Now a new track is being laid into what will be a smaller Snow Hill Station.

Sooner or later you'll wish you had a cellphone.

So it may as well be now.

Whether in your car or in your pocket cellphones work just like the phone on your desk, so the benefits are obvious.

And they use the Cellnet cellular system backed by British Telecom and Securicor.

Cellnet means coverage now within the M25 area, and coverage of most major towns and cities by the end of the year.

It means a wide range of retailers to choose from, and a wide range of phones once you've chosen.

It means conference calling, which probably makes it better than the phone on your desk.

At around £2 a day; can you afford not to ring 01-200 0200 (or cut out the coupon) for a list of Accredited Retailers?

LORD STOCKTON TAKES SWIPE AT MONETARISTS

By WALTER ABURN Parliamentary Staff

A CALL for Britain to take the lead in the third industrial revolution was made by the Earl of STOCKTON in yesterday's first televised debate in the House of Lords.

Taking a scornful swipe at monetarist theorists, he asked whether we were going to be in the revolution, playing a leading part, or whether we were going to wait until we all fell behind.

The United States was determined to press forward, said Lord Stockton, the former Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

We were told they had got too much debt and spent too much money, but how could you have production unless you borrowed the money to produce? he asked.

"I don't believe you produce and then borrow the money—you borrow the money and then produce."

A new fear had somehow crept up that we ought to be afraid of the new industrial revolution instead of pursuing it with all the energy we could.

A new law had been invented that there was no difference between capital and income; let us stop these futile and purely theoretical and academic economic arguments.

United effort

In countries like Taiwan and North and South Korea you could see more modern forms of industrial production than you could see in Britain.

"It must happen here—we must be the leader in the convoy: at any rate attempt to regain the leadership we have had so long."

Were we just slowly to sink like a great ship, or should we make a determined, united effort, putting as far as we could party aside?

"There could be co-operation —even national government. Let us do the latter and then historians of the future will not describe the end of this century as the beginning of the decline and fall of Britain but as the beginning of a new and glorious renaissance."

Lord Stockton's speech was delayed briefly by a noisy demonstration in the public gallery in support of the miners, which followed a speech by Lord Cledwyn of Penrhos.

A group of men unfurled placards and shouted slogans before filing orderly out of the gallery escorted by attendants.

Opposition motion

Lord BESWICK opened the debate from the Opposition benches by moving a motion calling for economic and social policies which would unite the nation and create employment, rather than reduce taxation, renew national pride in our Welfare State and encourage motives of social responsibility rather than self-interest.

Constructive discussion was required to get the widest possible agreement on Government policies which affected us all, he said.

We had to consider the sort of society we would like to be.

Calling for new public spending policies, he condemned assumptions of infallibility under Mrs Thatcher as "the unacceptable face of democratic Government."

The pound had slumped to an all-time low, while unemployment was at an all-time high. For the first time there was a deficit in the overseas trading account.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer had been massaging his accounts with oil revenues and the sale of national assets worth millions of pounds.

Enormous sums could be used to build the country's future, but the Prime Minister had said that taxes should be cut. Was it not just possible that somewhere some of our priorities were wrong.

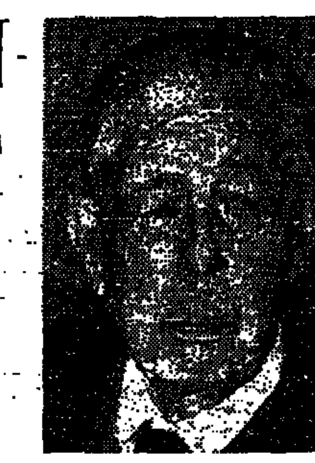
Strike condemned

The Earl of GOWRIE, the Government's Economic affairs spokesman, condemned the miners' strike as heartbreaking, tragic and unnecessary.

"There is no winter of discontent," he said. "There has never been effective Parliamentary support for the strike, and there is less and less support outside Parliament."

The message was that the Government and the nation was not being defeated by a largely Left-led public sector trade union.

Lord Gowrie said that though the Government was confident that its economic strategy would produce growth and new jobs, it recognised the special problem of unemployment and that the overall strategy was not enough by itself.



Lord STOCKTON: You borrow the money and then produce.

Bishop of BIRMINGHAM: Need to feel a sense of purpose.

Maiden speech

For the Liberals, Baroness SEEAR accused the Government of being obsessed with monetarism. "It is because the Government is so dominated by this economic theory that it is unable to graps the social and political aspects of the problems we face," she said.

The Bishop of BIRMINGHAM, the Rt Rev Hugh Montefiore, making his maiden speech, said it was sad to reflect that while war united the nation and brought out the best in people, peace tended to make them self-centred and brought out divisions.

The miners' strike was, at least in part, an example of the struggle between north and south.

People needed to feel a real sense of purpose and that they were participating in a just society.

Lord CLEDWYN of PENRHOS, Labour leader in the Lords, said a combination of high unemployment and acute insecurity had prompted the miners' strike. The Government had an obligation to draw up an agenda by which a settlement could be achieved.

"If both sides can move away from public rhetoric to private negotiation a working format could be agreed," he believed.

Lord MONKSWELL, the newest hereditary peer on the Labour benches, who took his seat in the Lords on Tuesday, praised Lord Stockton's analysis of Britain's economic ills.

"Lord Stockton revealed a fairly shattering division. I was brought up to believe that Conservative policies were always wrong and the party was totally united.

But my illusions are now shattered because the Earl has revealed to me, in glowing terms, that the Tory party is in fact terribly divided," he said.

The Bishop of NORWICH, the Rt Rev Maurice Wood, praised the Government for succeeding in the battle against inflation. He also praised the Government's youth training scheme in Norwich, which was resulting in well over 50 per cent. of local youngsters finding work.

MEDICAL AID FOR ETHIOPIA PLEA

A plea to the Government to send medical teams to Ethiopia to combat the cholera outbreak ravaging refugee camps was made by Dr DAVID OWEN, S D P leader, during Commons Question Time yesterday.

Mr Malcolm Rifkind, Foreign Office Minister, replied that the Government had committed £14 million in aid to Ethiopia, and Mr Timothy Raison, Overseas Development Minister, would give careful thought to the best way this could make a contribution.

MONEY-SAVING CALL REJECTED

A suggestion to cut costs by sending overseas Foreign Office officials' children to State instead of public schools, put forward at Question Time by Mr DALE CAMPBELL-SAVOURS (Lab., Workington) in the Commons yesterday, was rejected by Sir GEOFFREY HOWE, Foreign Secretary.

For many years the salaries of officials in remote stations had been supplemented in this way. It would be wrong to make such changes "for the narrow, bitter class reasons you advance," he told Mr Campbell-Savours.

DEBATE ON PITS AGAIN DENIED

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

CLAIMS that the Government and "elements" within the Coal Board wanted to prevent a negotiated settlement of the miners' strike were made in the Commons yesterday as Labour M Ps again demanded an emergency debate on the dispute.

Two applications were turned down by the SPEAKER, Mr Weatherill, who reminded the House of his earlier remarks that there should be a debate at an appropriate moment and when it would be helpful to a settlement.

As before, he said that the requests did not meet the criteria for an emergency debate.

'Observation of reality'

Conservatives protested noisily when Mr ROBERT CLAY (Lab., Sunderland N.) appeared to predict fresh disorder on the picket lines if miners believed there was not going to be a negotiated settlement.

"That is not a threat," he responded. "It is an observation of reality.

"People who believe Parliament does not give a damn about what happens have nothing else left to resort to."

Mr Clay, in his application for a debate, accused the Government and Coal Board "hawks" of being determined to prevent negotiations on any conditions.

By way of evidence, he cited the meeting on Monday between members of the N U M and Mr Ned Smith, the Coal Board director-general of industrial relations, which, he said, lasted from 12.55 to 3.25 p.m.

Discussions 'useful'

Though both sides signed a minute saying the discussions had been useful, the miners' representatives were greeted as they left the building with the 1 p.m. edition of the London STANDARD quoting Mr Michael Eaton, the Coal Board spokesman, as saying the talks had failed.

"It is clear that a senior official of the N C B, who must have had authority from the Government, had effectively told the Press that these talks had failed even before they started."

The other application for an emergency debate was made by Mr GEOFFREY LOFTHOUSE (Lab., Pontefract and Castleford), who accused the "public school punks" on the "Tory benches of taking a "sadistic pleasure" on the plight of the miners.

'Social harm' in Post Office cuts says Labour

By PETER PRYKE Parliamentary Correspondent

THE rigorous financial targets for the Post Office set by the Government were responsible for a closure programme which would cause serious social harm Mr JOHN SMITH, Shadow Industry Secretary, said in the Commons last night.

The elderly and disabled would be particularly vulnerable, he said.

The demand that counter services should show a higher profit had led to the possible closure of 78 main post offices and 900 sub post offices, he said.

Mr GEOFFREY PATTIE, Information Technology Minister denied that the financial targets were responsible for the closure programme, which is concentrated on urban areas.

He argued that the existing network, with a total of 1,567 main and 21,000 sub offices, was excessive and out of keeping with shifts in population.

Mr Pattie said that rationalisation was needed so that the Post Office could finance technological innovations such as automatic cash dispensers.

Rigorous targets

Mr SMITH, moving a motion condemning the Government's financial policies towards the Post Office, asked why closures were necessary when a profit of up to £110 million was likely this year.

The reason was the new financial regime, he said. The Government no longer paid the Post Office its costs plus a two per cent. profit margin for its work for Government departments.

Much more rigorous financial targets had been set for the Post Office. Counter services, despite the fact they would make a substantial profit of about 12 million this year, were being required to make an increased profit.

"The targets are set at a level which require counter services to indulge in a major cost cutting exercise, leading necessarily to closures," said Mr Smith.

This was "at a time when they are under pressure because the Government is removing business from them by other means of paying pensions."

Greater efficiency

Denying that the Government was responsible for the closures, Mr PATTIE acknowledged that the Post Office had been required to reduce its real unit costs.

This meant greater efficiency on the part of the Post Office, but did not actually require a mark-up in profits.

The Government had been satisfied that the Post Office's proposals were not inconsistent with the statutory social obligations.

He said that those such as the elderly and disabled would have the opportunity to arrange for friends and neighbours to collect their payments.

The Post Office's response to new competition was reflected in its technology programme, including a network of automatic cash dispensers and plans for counter automation.

But this could not be done if it was tied to a network which was now in excess of the standards which had been laid down for the urban areas in the past.

He pointed out that in the last five years of the Labour Government, 1,140 post offices had closed compared with 734 in the last five years of the Conservative administration.

Mr SMITH said that for many communities post offices played a vital role, in the administration of the social security system, and a place where the elderly could meet friends and neighbours as well as collect their pensions.

'Relentless process'

The closures were part of a relentless Government process of increasing unemployment and reducing public and community services simultaneously.

Two Conservative backbenchers criticised the closure proposals. Mr RICHARD ALEXANDER (Newark) said the decision to close two sub offices in his constituency was "a disgrace."

"It is a decision taken against the clear evidence of hardship for the least fortunate people — those least able to cope, those who need help most." It was a decision that "should not take place in a caring civilised society."

The Labour motion was defeated by 348 votes to 208. Government majority 140.

MPs PROTEST OVER STRIKE

By Our Parliamentary Staff

TORY M Ps complained in the Commons yesterday about the withdrawal of services in their own post office, part of a London-wide strike coinciding with the debate on counter closures.

Mr JAMES PAWSEY (C., Rugby and Kenilworth) told the Speaker, Mr Bernard Weatherill, that the strike had seriously impeded M Ps in their duties.

Mr Weatherill said that he hoped the withdrawal of services would not recur.

But Mr HARRY EWING (Lab. Falkirk E) criticised complaints about what was only a temporary closure. The closure programmed would cause great inconvenience to hundreds of thousands of people "on a permanent basis."

Howe snub for Euro inquiry

By Our Parliamentary Staff

THE Government would not co-operate with the European Parliament's inquiry into alleged police brutality during the miners' strike, Sir GEOFFREY HOWE, Foreign Secretary, made clear in the Commons yesterday.

"We will not co-operate with inquiries on subjects outside the European Parliament's responsibilites. That includes police matters," he said.

Mr TEDDY TAYLOR (C, Southend E) urged the Govern*ment not to* co-operate with "bands of so-called Euro M Ps descending on this country to investigate matters of purely domestic interest like the conduct of the police during the miners' strike."

'Scant respect'

The Foreign Secretary said it was deplorable that the Labour party had allowed this matter to be dragged onto the floor at Strasbourg with scant respect for the authority of the House of Commons.

FORD ANNOUNCE THE FIRST DIRECT INJECTION DIESEL IN A VAN.

Don't be deceived by that familiar Transit bonnet line: beneath it lurks an economic miracle.

The first-ever direct injection diesel developed specially for the medium van. Test drive it, and you'll be so impressed by the way the 2.5 litre Di moves you could well miss what doesn't. The fuel gauge.

THE COMPETITION CAN'T COMPETE.

Even in mixed driving, semi-laden, Ford calculate a one-tonne Transit Di is capable of 36 mpg.*

Over 25,000 miles – less than a year's driving for many "trunking" vans – such miserly thirst makes the Di about £150 cheaper to run than the next best fuel efficient van on the market.

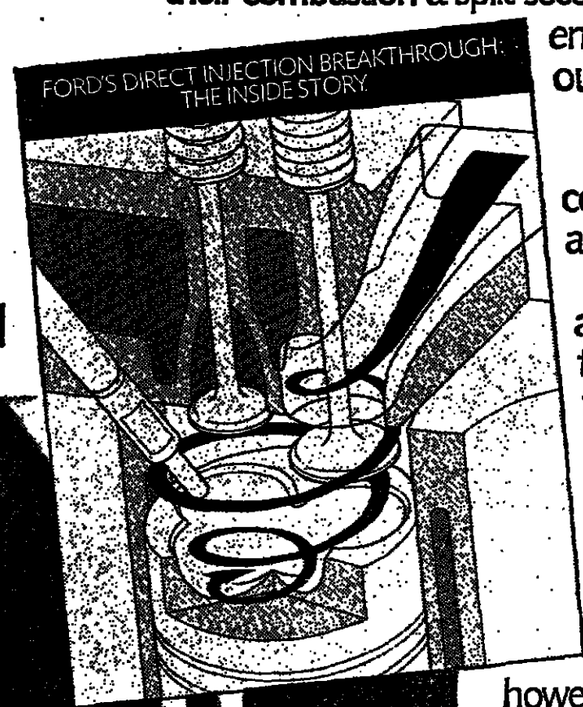
It really is like having every eighth gallon free.

It's also like having your cake and eating it. So simple is the new engine that it cuts overheads as well as consumption: so efficient is it that all the familiar drawbacks of diesel van operation are removed at a stroke.

MORE POWER FROM LESS FUEL.

Gone is the glow-plug, the waiting and wondering about ignition. Gone, too, is the ponderous two-stage combustion process of indirect injection, which blows so many unburnt hydrocarbons out through the exhaust and gives diesel its "smelly" reputation.

The development by Ford of "swirl" technology (see diagram) enables faster, more thorough mixing of air with fuel, and their combustion a split-second later in the one place where energy can be translated directly into output.



The piston crown.

You feel the benefits where they count most: under your right foot and in your wallet.

For while the Di sips less than any comparable diesel, it revs more freely and develops maximum torque higher in the power band. At the same time, careful choice of gear ratios means that it drives and accelerates like a petrol engine.

WHAT'S A GARAGE?

It's no quicker into the garage, however.

Simple oil and filter changes at 6,000 miles, and major service intervals only at 12,000, make the Di as cheap to run as it is to fuel.

More than £130 million has been invested by Ford in giving the Di its unique blend of economy with performance, so it's hardly surprising the others have some catching up to do.

With fuel the price it is, though, can you afford to wait?

FORD TRANSIT

FORD CARES ABOUT QUALITY.

*Fuel economy figures are an average of the ELA urban cycle and a constant 56 mph, and both performance and fuel economy are measured and calculated by Ford Motor Company Limited in line with EEC procedure 80/1268/EEC, or manufacturers published figures.

Sales & Marketing Manager

AEG-TELEFUNKEN introduced Peugeot DIY Power Tools to Britain some 12 months ago and the range is now poised for a major sales and marketing offensive.

It is to initiate, plan and direct this essentially aggressive new programme that we now wish to appoint a high-calibre marketing entrepreneur, who preferably has had broad exposure to the DIY power tool or a similar market and is experienced in negotiations at the very highest level with such clients as wholesalers, superstores, multiples, mail order houses and specialist retailers. One of the first tasks, in this challenging 'green field' opportunity, will be to create a sales force, working in close liaison both with Peugeot in France and with AEG in this country: a working knowledge of French would therefore be an asset.

For the ambitious, dedicated person who succeeds in this role, the prospects for further professional development will be little less than exceptional - as is the remuneration package which includes a highly attractive salary, bonus scheme, Peugeot car, BUPA, permanent health insurance plus the full range of executive benefits you would expect from one of the world's leading engineering organisations.

Please phone for an application form or send a full cv, including present salary, to: Liz McClure, Personnel Manager, AEG-TELEFUNKEN (UK) Ltd, 217 Bath Road, Slough, Berks. Tel: Slough 872350.

c. £12,000 + car

Based at Slough but with considerable travel throughout the UK, you'll carry responsibility for developing contacts with potential fleet customers, directly and through our existing dealer network.

You should have a sound sales background, although not necessarily in the motor trade. Particularly important is the ability to negotiate at all levels. Some business accounting knowledge would be useful.

Sales Trainers

c. £11,000 + car

We regard sales training as vital to our overall marketing function and we are looking for two additional Sales Trainers, based in Slough, to train dealer management and sales staff. This will involve course research and design; the organisation of training courses and instruction.

You should have sound communicative and interpersonal skills coupled with training experience in the motor industry.

Marketing Promotions Executives

c. £12,000 + car

We are looking for two executives; one based in Slough and the other in Manchester. Reporting to the Regional Manager, you will be responsible for ensuring that dealers in your region make effective use of advertising and promotional resources.

You will also advise on co-operative advertising and budget awareness on promotional campaigns for which you will be expected to implement marketing studies.

These are challenging roles calling for considerable energy, enthusiasm and a sound understanding of advertising and promotion techniques. Ideally, you should have experience of dealer liaison at senior level but not necessarily in the motor industry.

Network Financial Advisers

c. £14,000 + car

Two appointments are to be made, based at Slough and Manchester, both involving considerable travel in the UK. Primary responsibilities, under the Network Financial Services Manager, will be to assist dealers in improving their profitability by providing financial advice and systems expertise in operating the franchise. You will also make financial assessments of prospective new dealers and implement and consolidate our dealer composite system.

You should be at least a part-qualified Accountant and have experience of book-keeping and accounting in the retail motor trade. Some knowledge of HP finance, stocking finance and taxation would be advantageous.

Management Accountant

c. £15,000 + car

This senior position, based at Slough, will involve responsibility, under the Company Secretary, for all management accounting functions, including preparation of budgets, pricing proposals and monthly management accounts.

You should be a qualified Accountant and have experience of working in a computerised environment. Knowledge of French is desirable.

These positions offer exceptional opportunities to play a major role in Citroën's development.

Write now with full c.v., stating which of these positions interests you, to Ken Broome, Personnel and Administration Manager, Citroën Cars Limited, Mill Street, Slough, Berks SL2 5DE

HEALTH SCREENING
London base

Health screening and preventive medicine is a growth sector which is led by BUPA Medical Centres who have a network of Health Centres throughout Great Britain.

In order to sell and promote our services in London and the Home Counties, we are seeking an additional Development Officer with proven sales experience, ideally in a service environment. You will be based in London and cover the area North of the Thames plus the Home Counties.

To qualify you will need to demonstrate the confidence, determination and maturity to gain access to and sell at Board level in companies of all sizes and whilst you will need the self motivation to work on your own, you will have the support of an administrative assistant who will handle much of the routine paper and telephone work.

This worthwhile and developing service offers the potential for personal career development either within the company or the wider scope of the full BUPA organisation.

Starting salary will be c£8,000 + £1,380 London Allowance, plus car, reviewed after six months' service; other benefits include free BUPA and life assurance and a mortgage subsidy after a qualifying period.

For an application form and further details, please contact the Personnel Department, BUPA Medical Centre, Battle Bridge House, 300 Gray's Inn Road, London, WC1X 8DU. Telephone 01-837 6484.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERS

FOR SPACECRAFT AND LAUNCH VEHICLE DESIGN

Long acknowledged as leaders in the design and manufacture of communications satellites, we are continuing to build on our 20 years of experience. As well as developing our range of communications satellites we are now involved in new and exciting projects covering future satellite launch vehicles and space stations. We have the following key vacancies for mechanical design staff:

STRESS ENGINEERS – at all levels

To be responsible for all aspects of strength and stiffness of spacecraft and associated hardware. In addition to candidates with a knowledge of finite element analysis techniques we are interested in experienced advanced analytical personnel who are familiar with traditional aircraft stressing methods.

SENIOR STRUCTURES ENGINEERS

Preferably with at least five years' proven success in aerospace structural design, reinforced plastics or closely allied fields. We offer unrivalled job interest to candidates who demonstrate the right ability and skill.

DEVELOPMENT ENGINEERS

Structural test – engineers with experience of rig design, test programming, analysis and reporting.

Propulsion – engineers to undertake development testing of spacecraft pressurisation and propulsion systems, component evaluation, test rig design, and filling and draining activities on spacecraft both in our own facilities and at launch sites.

PROPULSION ENGINEERS

For the design and development of propulsion systems, particularly bi-propellant systems for communications spacecraft.

Applicants should preferably be qualified to degree or HND level, but experience will be the major factor in selecting suitable candidates.

Salaries are negotiable according to qualifications and experience, and will reflect the importance we attach to these positions. Other benefits include a generous holiday entitlement, contributory pension scheme, and excellent social club facilities. In appropriate cases a generous relocation package is available.

STORE MANAGERS

Wickes style of home improvement retailing is one of the most exciting and fast moving within the U.K. and therefore demands the U.K.'s top retail management skills.

We require senior store management who can demonstrate clear evidence of success in high volume retailing, though not necessarily in our field.

A Wickes store manager is responsible for a 25,000 square foot superstore with a multi-million pound turnover and a throughput of goods which demands stocktums more commonly found in high volume food retailing.

Our philosophy calls for managers who relish controlling their store from the shopfloor and who are willing to commit themselves to a unique and successful concept. In addition to the above salary we also offer a non-contributory pension scheme and free family health insurance. Relocation expenses will be paid where appropriate.

HEAD OF RESEARCH & DEVELOPMENT

Electronic Components, Packages and Test Equipment

You are currently at Project or Group Leader level working on electronic products design. Chances are you've a BSc or equivalent. And with more than 5 years broad-based electronics experience under your belt, you are now looking for the responsibility of presiding over a full and challenging research and development programme.

Like with our Clients – FR Electronics. They are part of Flight Refuelling Ltd., a staggeringly successful and highly innovative company.

FR Electronics have an upmarket reputation for components ranging from keyboard switches and reed relays to mother boards and electronic timers. So when you join them you can expect a pattern of continuous company growth and a stimulating list of forward looking projects to handle.

As a member of Senior Management your role will be to provide state-of-the-art technical input and guidance to your R & D team of 8. You'll be involved in exploring the viability of new ideas and you'll manage the total design capability through from conception to production.

The rewards? Initially a salary negotiated around £15k, plus a significant bonus and relocation to the beautiful Wimborne, Dorset area. Also, there is a share ownership incentive scheme and, in a company with such an unbeatable growth record, very good prospects indeed.

Superb Green Field Opportunities in Personnel Management

The Harris Queensway Group has enjoyed phenomenal growth in recent years. Today its turnover is in excess of £300 million, with more than 700 stores and 7,000 staff. This dramatic growth has resulted in a decision to decentralise the Personnel function and to offer outstanding opportunities in various Divisions and locations to ensure the continuing success of the Group.

Personnel Controller:
Electrical, Camberley

This position carries responsibility for developing an already established Personnel function within an environment handling a wide range of electrical goods, which are mainly 'concession' operations.

Personnel Manager:
Carpets, Orpington

The 'original business' and the second largest Division within the Group, this excellent opportunity requires development of the Personnel organisation to support ever-increasing growth.

Personnel Manager:
Furnishings, Orpington

Diversification into furnishings has resulted in the need to establish this Personnel operation and to ensure professional practices are increasingly developed and implemented.

Personnel Manager:
Carpets, Orpington

Responsibility similarly in this case relates to a Division formed less than 2 years ago, with the emphasis on the operation of Cash & Carry units of 8,000-10,000 sq.ft.

HARRIS QUEENSWAY PLC

Personnel Manager:
Non-Food Retail, Leeds

This Yorkshire-based operation is expanding particularly rapidly and its successful development now requires professional expertise to ensure the further growth of this Division.

Personnel Manager:
Carpets, East Kilbride

Based in Scotland, this Division sells carpets either from display or on a Cash & Carry basis. Again, rapid growth requires skilled Personnel input to support this important growth area.

Personnel Manager:
Electrical, Camberley

Through providing valuable support to the Personnel Controller, this expanding Division requires practical 'grass roots' Personnel experience to help control an already established Department in this sector of the business.

All these opportunities require several years' generalist Personnel experience. Aged 25-35, you should preferably be educated to Degree level, be IPM qualified and possess a multiple retailing or similar background.

Ambitious, credible, articulate and numerate with the ability to present written material concisely, you will be eager to attain even higher status in this dynamic organisation within the foreseeable future.

Salaries are negotiable and reflect the varying sizes of the Divisions. In all cases except the latter one above, a company car is provided. Other excellent benefits include BUPA, Pension/Life Assurance, Staff Discount and other facilities. Ideally, you should presently reside within commuting distance of at least one of the above locations, but relocation assistance will be considered if appropriate.

Interested? Then, specifying clearly for which position you are applying, please write, in strict confidence, to us: Richard J. Sowerby or Stephen R. Boyd, Sowerby's (Selection) Ltd., Personnel Consultants, 500 Chesham House, 150 Regent Street, London W1R 5FA. Tel: 01-439 6288. (These positions are open to both men and women).

Technical Services Manager
Offshore Construction

Our client is one of the leading offshore constructors in the UK. Recent reorganisation has created a vacancy for a Technical Services Manager who will be responsible for all engineering and technical services, specifically including design and engineering, construction methods, works scheduling and planning, and the preparation and control of engineering budgets.
Applications are invited from chartered engineers with relevant experience in constructing large offshore or other major structures.
Remuneration will include an attractive salary plus a car and other substantial benefits. Ref. C/574/2.

Sales Manager
Pipe Products

Our client is a major supplier of pipework to water authorities and other users. The company requires a Sales Manager to plan and co-ordinate sales activities in order to achieve a substantial increase in sales over the next 2 or 3 years.
Previous experience selling to water authorities is essential and an engineering background would be an advantage.
Remuneration includes a competitive salary plus a good bonus. A company car is provided. Ref. C/578/2.

Field Sales Manager
Capital Equipment Systems — To £14K + Car

Our clients have increased their turnover, market share and profits in 1984 and now need a "Top Drawer" Field Sales Manager to head their national sales team. He or she will have a full sales budget responsibility and manage a team active in a distributor network and certain retail markets. A key task will be the development of regionally based sales representatives proficient in all facets of selling especially in product appreciation and commercial skills.
The appointment calls for an "achiever" who can support and inspire an experienced sales team. A background in a technically based product at Area/Regional Manager level is required with an affinity for the systems approach to selling.
In addition to a competitive initial salary, our client offers five weeks holiday, a 2 litre car and a group pension and life assurance scheme. Location will be for discussion. The opportunity to development into general management is excellent.
Applications for this position will be forwarded direct to our client. List separately any companies to whom your application should not be sent. Ref. C/585/2.

To apply for any of the above posts please telephone 01-499 1948 (24 hour answering service) for a personal history form quoting the job reference or write in confidence to

Barnett Consulting Group

When we apply computers to communications, the results are staggering.

The same will be true when you apply yourself to one of these jobs

"Convergent Technology" is a concept a lot of people are talking about these days.

At IAL's Data Communications Division located at Basingstoke, we're doing something rather more constructive than talking.

In fact, we've been integrating computers and communications for at least 15 years, with the result that when blue-chip organisations start thinking about data transmission systems, they think of IAL first.

Major UK clearing banks and building societies; banks and the big financial institutions in Europe, the Middle East and US; third world countries anxious to catch up on the latest communications technology – our list of clients is long and impressive.

And what's doubly impressive is the way a high proportion of those clients keep coming back to us for enhancements, for new systems, or simply for consultation.

But although we've many great achievements in the past, the greatest are yet to come.

Because at the dawn of the era of digital transmission technology, we've the new digital products and the proven systems experience that can only lead to a quantum leap in our business, as we help new and existing clients migrate to the new opportunities of digital systems.

That's the promise the future holds for us.

It could hold the same for you, if you're a man or woman who could handle one of these jobs:-

Customer Service Installation Engineer

You've an ONC/C&G or full Tech Cert, and experience of installing data comms systems and products, and you can handle wiring to British Telecom standards.

With us, you'd discover what it's like to be responsible for more complex installations, including data management and switching systems; as well as individual products such as modems and multiplexers. You'll also discover the special attractions and challenges of occasional overseas assignments. Ref. K209/01.

Installation and Commissioning Engineer

This is a new job, which would see you shouldering a lot of responsibility on advanced systems for top-flight clients both in the UK and overseas.

To handle it, you'll need an ONC/C&G, and some worthwhile experience of installing radio and telephone communications systems, together with their power supplies. Ref. K209/02.

Systems Engineer

If you have at least an ONC or C&G, and your data comms experience leans heavily towards communications networks, this could be an unrepeatable opportunity to handle full responsibility for project control, network design and product applications covering the whole of IAL's extensive product range, from modems to management systems. Ref. K209/03.

Products Engineer

This is a role right at the leading edge of our new product development, since you'd be responsible for evaluating and assessing new products for use in our own future applications, and by OEM's.

Your particular involvement will be in high-speed networks and X25 network products, so your broad knowledge of the data communications industry should include digital and X25 networks, and you'll hopefully have some hardware and/or software experience. You'll certainly have an HNC/D, preferably a degree. Ref. K209/04.

Software Development Engineer

The software in question is applications packages to support one of our new digital packet switching systems. In detailed terms, the work will include the preparation of comprehensive specifications, pseudo code generation, coding and system testing, plus supporting documentation.

For the job to be yours, you'll need a degree or equivalent, with relevant software experience that hopefully includes PASCAL or C, data comms, digital or X25 networking applications, and familiarity with DEC hardware. Ref. K209/05.

Export Sales Executive

Scandinavian and African markets would be your concern, and your brief would be to develop sales of our products and systems through distributors.

You'll be qualified to degree level or equivalent in a relevant business or technical discipline, and your highly impressive sales record will either be in data communications or a closely related industry. Ref. K209/06.

We know you'll be used to reading advertisements that all seem to offer exceptional opportunities in high-growth, high-tech industries.

The problem is, words alone can't do proper justice to what we can offer you at a time in our history when the future looks better than ever.

But if you contact the Recruitment Executive at the address below you'll soon discover that the facts are even more impressive than the words you've read here. Please quote the appropriate reference number.

THE WORLD STILL RECALLS GLASGOW'S JUBILEE EXHIBITION OF 1888. YOU COULD BE REMEMBERED FOR THE MONUMENTAL EVENT OF 1988.

CHIEF EXECUTIVE · 3RD NATIONAL GARDEN FESTIVAL · GLASGOW 1988

1888 INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, KELVINGROVE PARK

Glasgow has been nominated as the location for the Third National Garden Festival. The Scottish Development Agency at the request of Glasgow District Council will be responsible for the organisation and funding of the Festival which will run between May and September 1988.

The Agency will establish a wholly owned subsidiary company to market and operate the Festival as well as to co-ordinate its design. Management and cost control of construction will be the responsibility of the Agency which already has substantial experience in this field. This responsibility will be carried out in accordance with the Festival Company's requirements.

The Chief Executive will be responsible for ensuring that the event is a national success and specifically for maximising visitor attendance and commercial sponsorship and for making the Festival a major focus for promoting Scotland's tourist industry.

THE BURRELL COLLECTION

The successful applicant will be able to demonstrate an outstanding track record in marketing with, preferably, experience of major visitor events or product promotions. The Chief Executive will also be expected to demonstrate overall management ability as well as public relations skill in handling a major national event.

A significant compensation package will be offered for a contract to the end of 1988. Secondment proposals will be considered.

Please write in confidence quoting reference CEGF/DT to: David Swift, Staff Executive, Scottish Development Agency, 120 Bothwell Street, Glasgow G2 7JP.

International Defence Project

My Client is part of an international consortium working on a major guided weapon system from their base in the Home Counties.

They have challenging openings in terms of technology, travel and reward for experienced engineers in the following roles:

Engineers - Stabilisation System Design - to £16,000

Design and Development of miniature stable platform systems for missile applications. This will include concept selection, design and manufacture to system requirement specifications involving detailed mechanical layouts, mechanical characterisation and design and development of servo-electronics systems.

Engineers - Antenna Design - to £14,000

Design and Development of antenna and radome system for a millimetric wave seeker head. This is a high performance directional multimode antenna including a millimetric radome and mechanical scanning system.

Systems Engineer - neg. c. £13,500

The initial definition and then the maintenance of requirements, design standards and interface conditions for the hardware. Undertaking a variety of systems tasks including reliability and safety matters and conducting trade studies and analyses.

Engineer - Guidance System Design - neg. c. £13,000

To develop and optimise the autopilot/guidance loop for a guided weapon to provide designed homing trajectory control, working with others and allowing for aerodynamic characteristics and sensor requirements.

Engineer - Seeker Systems - neg. c. £13,000

Carrying out systems design activities for a millimetre wave seeker involving specifications, systems calculations, system integration test and evaluation, trade studies, tracking system design.

A good benefits package will include relocation, where appropriate, and reflect the international nature of the job.

I can give you more information, so phone me, Michael Allbrook, to arrange a detailed discussion about the openings offered by my Client. My number is (0403) 752299 outside working hours and (0483) 275666 at work.

ARCHERS

Smithbrook Kilns, Cranleigh, Guildford, Surrey GU6 8JJ.

Creative Engineer – Writers for Denmark

You are invited to apply for a challenging position in the lively international atmosphere of our Technical Publications Group. You will be engaged in the preparation of high-quality technical literature to promote and support our continuously expanding range of instrumentation for the measurement and analysis of sound and vibration, plus medical diagnostics using ultrasound.

An important aspect of the work is assessment of new instruments and their application possibilities. This involves close collaboration with our Product Development and Marketing Groups, and can include lecturing and demonstrations, both at home or abroad.

You should be a qualified engineer, typically with a degree in electronics, applied physics or mechanical engineering. A good practical as well as theoretical knowledge of analogue and digital techniques is desirable. Personal qualities sought are the ability to communicate effectively in written and spoken English, plus the initiative to work largely unsupervised.

You will work at our international headquarters and factory which is situated in a pleasant semi-rural environment just north of Copenhagen. Salaries are attractive and negotiated individually. Total annual vacation is five weeks plus public holidays.

If you feel that your background makes you suitable for these positions, please write, enclosing your C.V. to Jørgen Jessen, Brüel & Kjær A/S, Nærum Hovedgade 18, 2850 Nærum, Denmark.

BRÜEL & KJÆR

Brüel & Kjær, Denmark, is the world's leading manufacturer of advanced instrumentation for measurement and analysis of sound and vibration. Almost all of the company's production is exported and all technical literature is written in English and translated into as many as 18 languages. Headquarters and factory staff total 2000 persons.

Director Sales & Marketing

Specialist Engineering

c£25,000 plus usual benefits.

This is an independent company with a high technology related product which is firmly established and highly profitable. To drive the company on through its next phase of growth we need an exceptionally good Sales & Marketing Director with broad management potential.

Candidates should have a background of industrial applications selling, where product performance is of greater importance than price. As 50% of the business is overseas experience of appointing agents and distributors is essential and a knowledge of such industries as food processing, conveyors and office machinery extremely useful. The upper age limit is 45.

The company has tremendous potential, is based in a most attractive location in Yorkshire and the prospects for the right person are excellent.

Applicants, male or female, should either write or telephone quoting reference B2238.

ASSISTANT CONTRACTS CO-ORDINATOR

Conoco is one of the world's leading energy concerns and part of the highly successful DuPont Group. The Viking Gas Terminal currently supplies over 10% of Britain's Natural Gas and our plans include considerable capital investment over the next two years. Commercial contracts play an important part in every aspect of our business and we now have an excellent opportunity for a contracts professional in our busy contracts group.

The main function of this new position is to prepare, formulate and assist in the negotiation of all commercial contracts for our Southern Operations, ensuring that they comply with operating, corporate, Government and legal requirements. These contracts form the corner stone of our operations and you will therefore provide a key service to Management.

Ideally, you will be a business studies or law graduate in your mid or late twenties with in-depth experience of commercial contracts in the petrochemical industry. You will have three years' experience working for a major company involved in offshore construction or a similar field and be seeking your next career move. Self-motivation, maturity and confidence, combined with excellent interpretative skills and acute commercial awareness are also essential pre-requisites. Some purchasing, accounting or engineering experience would be a distinct advantage.

An attractive salary is offered c.£9500 to £11000, together with an impressive benefits package including a non-contributory pension scheme and stock ownership plan. The post is based in Lincolnshire and relocation assistance will be available where applicable.

For further information, contact Mrs. Miranda Boncey, Personnel Officer, Conoco (UK) Limited, Viking Gas Terminal, Theddlethorpe, Lincolnshire, telephone 0521-73553, extension 3188.

MEETING ENERGY NEEDS...CREATING CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

Young Production Manager

The right environment to build a career

North London c£12,000 + relocation

This advertisement is aimed at mature young qualified production-orientated individuals who can demonstrate a progressive career path and who are looking for their first 'line management' role. Our client can provide both the opportunity and, perhaps more importantly, the environment in which to grow.

The company is a highly successful part of a significant UK group engaged in the batch manufacture of electronic equipment. This equipment is manufactured at its North London production centre utilising both electronic and mechanical skills.

As a member of an integrated management team, the responsibility is to maximise production efficiency and optimise the considerable investment in the very latest manufacturing technology through professional resource management. It will involve controlling production on a day-to-day basis and being responsible for targetting, scheduling and loading. It calls for a good communicator, someone who has the ability and experience to be able to adapt rapidly within a dynamic environment, yet is essentially a team worker.

For the right person, there's an excellent future - the previous incumbent moved into a wider manufacturing role - a negotiable salary around £12,000 plus the usual major company benefits. Interested? Then send a detailed CV in absolute confidence to Melvyn Gadstone quoting ref BEN/890 at the address below.

TV / Daylight Upon Magic

Undisturbed dream

YESTERDAY began the process of demystifying Parliament. Print and radio are not the same. They have not destroyed the residual view of the House of Lords. The idea of a romantic, traditional ritual performed by very old and splendidly impractical men in ermine and coronets, figures placed through birth or magical transformation alongside and yet a little above the human race.

As television reveals their lordships' suffering from the same fallibilities as the rest of us, if not more, we shall perhaps place an ever increasing reliance on the Royal Family to meet our national need for earthly mystery. Dreaming about the Queen and her relations, apparently quite common already, will increase.

This is not a prospect which entrances Anna Coote, who was last night allowed the 50 minutes of "Diverse Reports" to shed Daylight Upon Magic (C4), or rather to "present an alternative to the sycophantic and sentimental coverage of the Royals that we've become used to, on television and through Fleet Street."

Her method was to show clips of the Royals going about their public business, and attempt to deflate with cries of "Why can't we see that we are being conned?" or with examples of simple-minded adulation supposed to demonstrate that the starry-eyed are laughable. "We were talking about having people to stay and we showed her our spare room and I remember she said: 'Oh, it's always useful to have a spare bedroom,'" recalled a housewife after the Queen visited her flat.

The attempted demolition failed of course. Television is the medium which leaves strong impressions with the greatest of ease and is so resistant to the propagation of ideas. The impression made by the pictures, reinforcing at every step the royal mystique with that perfect mixture of distance and friendliness, quite overwhelmed the unfriendliness of the words.

Not that the words were specially distinguished. Republicanism was offered as a desirable alternative by people who probably would not have a good word for a single elected president, with the possible exception of the martyred Allende. The more promising line of argument, that the monarchy keeps us anchored to the past and so diverts us from necessary realism about the present and future, was not pursued with much rigour.

Meanwhile Miss Coote's namesake Anna of the Five Towns (B B C-2), dramatised from Arnold Bennett by John Harvey, continues to be appreciative of almost everything that is put before her. It is the effect of being raised by Ephraim the miser, a man who would probably accuse Queen Victoria herself of riotous extravagance.

This week Anna (Linsey Beauchamp) joined the Suttons for their Isle of Man holiday and the moment where she gazes out to sea and says: "I didn't believe things could be so beautiful" was made more moving than anything in the book.

The serial offers a stodidly pleasing escape from the difficulties of "Real Lives," the strong documentary anthology which this week faced the horrors of the Poisoned City—Bhopal (B B C-1). Richard Taylor's film drew a vividly ironic contrast between the victims of the worst ever industrial disaster and those who have followed in its wake. It is hard to recognise that the American lawyers who flocked to Bhopal for the money belong in the same world as the small children seen here either dying or waiting for the parents and siblings who have already died.

THEATRE / The Frankenstein Monster Show

Rather nice recycled monsters

IT IS sometimes a little hard, at the Theatre Royal, Stratford, E., to know whether the current entertainment is coming at you from the stage, the excited audience, the deafening orchestra, or the loudspeakers which amplify the noises they collectively make.

But a good time seems to be had by all, and especially by the youngsters of the Newham Youth Theatre, whose inexpert but enthusiastic "robotic" dancing is the mainstay of their musical farce "The Frankenstein Monster Show."

The writers, John Crocker and Tim Hampton, have thrown together a ramshackle script about a young scientist (the engaging Anthony Corrigan) who uses undertakers to supply him with corpses which he then recycles electronically into serviceable robots.

A latter-day Sherlock Holmes of comical incompetence gets mixed up in the shenanigans, as well as a charming female Dr Watson (Tracy O'Flaherty), a rather nice monster called Boris (Danny Carter) and a victimised party of American tourists.

The undistinguished songs by Ken Bolam and Les Scott are in the thumping repetitive rock idiom, the best being a chorus "Every Home Should Have a Happy Healthy Monster."

But the show is most bearable when the silly story gets lost and the dancers take over — hideously made up but as lively as a barrel-load of monkeys. The director, Mark Pattenden, holds a loose rein, but from the vivacity generated I take it he knows what he is doing.

John Barber

MUSIC / Cherubino's story

SO NOW at last the secret is out. Mozart and Da Ponte did not tell us the whole story in "Figaro." For a start, Marcellina, who, as Beaumarchais himself hinted in his production notes to the original play, had made "errors in her youth," once gave birth to a daughter — Barberina. Even worse, the father was not the gardener Antonio, as we had always thought, but Dr Bartolo. Around the same time, the future Countess was having an early dalliance with Count Almaviva, and surreptitiously produced a son—Cherubino—who was to become the Count's page and the bane of his life when Cherubino flirted with every woman in sight, not least his own mother (as we are now led to believe).

If you have not grasped all this, these revelations come in the second act of Giles Swayne's opera, "La Nozze Di Cherubino," which opened at the Jeannetta Cochrane Theatre on Tuesday night. This utterly speculative sequel takes up the story about three years after the curtain has fallen on Mozart's "La Nozze di Figaro."

The young Cherubino has returned from battle in (yes, you've guessed) the Falkland Islands, and has become a man. But Mr Swayne's libretto is even more inventive than that: Cherubino is now coveted not only by the female members of the cast, but by the house-guest Don Ottavio and by Don Basilio ("an outrageous queen," to use Mr Swayne's description); and Barberina, too, finds an admirer in Donna Anna, now a religious aesthetic, after her experiences in "Don Giovanni."

This opera is set in a sincere, Mozartian pastiche: pace Mr Swayne, who claims his music is not pastiche, but it is just that, and very clever indeed. He has avoided the necessity of engaging an orchestra by getting the cast, while they are not centre stage, to provide a quasi-instrumental complement to his small band of harpsichord, continuo and bass. It is an entertaining evening, not perhaps one for Mozart and Da Ponte purists, but one which captures something of the lively intrigue and vigour that belong to the realm of 18th-century comic opera.

The King's Singers / QEH

NEITHER literally nor figuratively have the King's Singers succumbed to middle-age spread. Indeed the youthful enthusiasm and dapper panache for which they are famous seems almost to have increased with the passing years, no doubt helped by the infusion of three newcomers.

Happily, they are still questing for fresh works to add to their repertory. At their annual London concert on Tuesday night in the Queen Elizabeth Hall, they gave the first British performance of Ned Rorem's "Pilgrim Strangers," written especially for the group. This work takes a lengthy prose passage from Walt Whitman's American Civil War diary, entitled "Specimen Days" and converts it into a highly original, beautifully shaped cantata.

The portrait of war's horror is told in seven scenes sung without a pause and linked by recitative. The banality, brutality, futility and pathos of battle are all evoked in the very immediate text, whose feelings are enhanced by Rorem's sensitive, lyrically inclined music, so much more arresting than would be an overtly harsh treatment. The composer has cleverly divided off the singers into pertinent and telling groups, preserving the whole six for certain climatic moments. The dedicatees sang it with evident love and involvement.

Janacek's Five Songs for four-part male choir were more unfamiliar territory. The lower voices of the group shaped these typically individual pieces in refined fashion, though perhaps omitting a certain robustness essential here.

For the rest, it was well-trodden, much-acclaimed repertory —a sympathetic tribute to the Comedy (surely not Comedian) Harmonists, some attractive, astutely chosen madrigals, including a typically languishing one by Gasualdo and close harmony arrangements. All were dispatched with the old joy and virtuosity. In particular, the rendering of "The Flight of the Bumblebee" remains an amazing feat of ensemble and is very amusing to boot.

ART / Glyn Philpot

THE WORK of Glyn Philpot, an artist who has been forgotten but who during his lifetime was very much à la mode, is the subject of an exhibition at the National Portrait Gallery, which continues until Feb. 10.

The sub-title of the exhibition, "Edwardian Aesthete to Thirties Modernist," neatly characterises Philpot. What is on view, and the most useful catalogue, provide us with all we need to understand the artist and appreciate his work, for it is the largest Philpot exhibition ever to be mounted.

Philpot was not just the portrait painter of the fashionable (and an excellent one as something like his portrait of Sir Oswald Mosley proves). He also carried out elaborate decorate schemes for patrons such as Lady Melchett and Sir Philip Sassoon.

He began as this exhibition demonstrates with book illustrations in a manner recalling the pre-Raphaelites, went on to become a successful portrait painter and then, during the 1930s, became aware of what was happening to art on the continent. It is the work that resulted from this that is Philpot's chief claim to fame.

As a result of trips to Paris and Berlin, and thanks to the influence of Picasso and Matisse, Philpot's style underwent a change. It was then that he produced his best work, which stands apart from most British painting of those days.

What this exhibition also makes clear is Philpot's versatility. Before his death in 1937 he executed not only portraits and decorative works but also still-lives and sculpture. We needed to be reminded of him.

'Pavlova'

The first night of the Anglo-Russian film "Pavlova: a Woman for All Time" at the Dominion Theatre London on March 10 will be a benefit performance in aid of London Festival Ballet's development fund.

DANCE / Coco Loco

"COCO LOCO," the new piece choreographed by Ian Spink which was performed by Extemporary Dance Theatre at the Shaw Theatre on Tuesday night, showed Mr Spink performing neatly to the artistic policy laid down by the Company's director, Emilyn Claid.

Miss Claid is a devotee of "post-modern dance," which means that she is little concerned with dancing. The first item in the programme "Field Studies" was accurately labelled in the programme as "constructed" by David Gordon, and indeed had no dancing in it. What the performers did was play about with chairs.

"Coco loco" was no less cerebral and dry, and in its first and last sections adhered conscientiously to the "post-modern" doctrine of avoiding dance at all costs. In the first section, three girls kept performing, over and over again, a few simple gestures, such as scrubbing the floor or smoothing their tights; apparently lacking any training in mime they could make little of these repetitive, naturalistic gestures.

The third section was no less glum. Here the three girls walked about in Chanel suits, looking rather uncomfortable in them; the main action took the form of men putting hats on the girls.

The central section did have some dancing, but this managed to be almost as dull as the other two sections.

Fortunately the programme as a whole did have a redeeming feature: two of the male dancers showed promise. The apprentice Jon Smart was given no solos in which he could display his talents properly but — in a way characteristic of those who have worked with Hilary Ball — he showed individuality and grace.

The other promising artist was the Thai dancer Tam, trained in classical Thai dancing. In the rather banal Dan Wagoner piece "Spiked Sonata" he was given a short solo and suddenly came to life, moving with admirable fluidity and lightness.

'Anna Karenina'

"Anna Karenina", Iain Hamilton's opera from Tolstoy's novel, will be revived by the English National Opera at the Coliseum on Feb. 8, with Lois McDonall in the title role and David Hillman as Vronsky.

The composer will give a talk about the opera before the performance on the first night. Further performances will be on Feb. 15, 16, 20 and 27.

FOLK / Manitas de Plata

MANITAS de PLATA, the almost legendary Spanish gypsy guitarist from the Camargue was billed to appear at the Barbican with his son Luis and Los Chicos. In the event, two of the three Chicos were unable to accompany him so the audience, it was explained from the stage, would have "less Chicos and more Manitas." And when after a rousing opening by Luis and the remaining Chico, Manitas made his entry, he was greeted with rapturous applause

"At 60," the classical guitar virtuoso Sabicas once said, "a guitarist is ready to play Por derecho by his own earned right." Manitas, who, we assume, must be somewhere near that point undoubtedly has that right so far as technique is concerned. But is was only occasionally that we sensed the additional dimension Sabicas meant, or the thrill that we had felt in Manitas's earliest appearances.

He did everything with the guitar except play it behind his back and displayed, without a shadow of loss, the skill which earned him his original sobriquet "Little Silver Hands." But it was when he brought his chair downstage, away from the microphones, and sat down to reveal the greatly gifted natural musician behind the flamboyance, that we were able to forget the dazzle for a moment and hear the roots of his music.

RESTRICTIONS ON POPULAR FILMS LIFTED

Restrictions on the showing of popular films, which operate in favour of big cinema chains, will be suspended during an experiment approved by the Government yesterday.

Consumer Affairs Minister Mr Fletcher, in a Commons written reply, approved proposals from the Director General of Fair Trading to implement Government plans cutting the period of exclusive showing by the big chains to four weeks—after which they would be available to competing cinemas.

The Government had proposed setting up the experiment after the Monopolies Commission called for an end to the system of alignment and "barring"—under which the showing of popular films could be restricted.

Art Sales

'Mousetrap' gun sold for £600

By ALISON BECKETT Art Sales Correspondent

THE gun used in more than 4,000 performances of Agatha Christie's "The Mousetrap" was sold to an unknown buyer at Sotheby's in London yesterday for £600.

When the show opened in 1952 it was used by Richard Attenborough as Det. Sgt Trotter. It was later sold for £6 to Sir Peter Saunders, who bought the rights to the play.

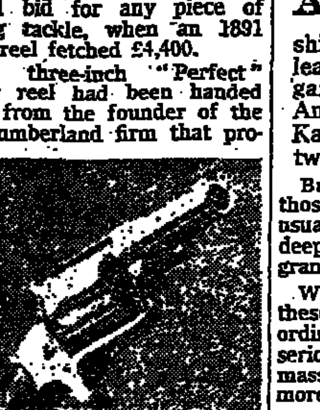
But while "The Mousetrap" has become the world's longest running play, the six-inch long Colt New House ·38 revolver was dropped from the production after real firearms were banned from stage shows in 1962.

Proceeds of its sale will go to help needy actors.

1891 trout reel

Other highlights of the shooting and fishing auction, which totalled £178,369, included a record bid for any piece of fishing tackle, when an 1891 trout reel fetched £4,400.

The three-inch "Perfect" Hardy reel had been handed down from the founder of the Northumberland firm that produced it. It topped the previous record last year by £1,100 when it went to a private buyer.



Gun for Sale—the "Mousetrap" Colt revolver which fetched £600 at auction.

The highest price paid for a rod was also achieved in the same auction when a mid-19th Century example by T. Aldred, purchased six months ago by the vendor at a jumble sale in Scotland for £1, realised £680.

MUSICAL BOX RECORD

£11,000 Donald Duck watch

In Sotheby's toy and doll sale the grand 1901 Swiss orchestral plaything of a Persian prince established a record for a musical box when it was sold to an American for £19,000.

The other star of the £319,560 auction was a Donald Duck 18-carat gold watch made only last year by Garrard to mark the character's 50th birthday. It more than doubled expectations, going to an English buyer for £11,000.

Prices do not include buyer's premium which is 10 per cent.

World Chess

BRILLIANCE DESPITE THE DRAWS

By B. H. WOOD
Chess Correspondent

ANOTHER draw in the world chess championship match yesterday leaves the score in won games (all that count) Anatoly Karpov 5, Gary Kasparov 1, as for the last two months.

But it is brilliant stuff. Even those very short draws are usually based on an assessment deeper than any but a super grand master could conceive.

When the match is over and these two players return to ordinary tournament play, my serious forecast is that they will massacre all their rivals even more mercilessly than before.

Consequences all calculated

In this game, when Kasparov made his 21st and 22nd moves, he had calculated out all the consequences up to his 27th and beyond.

In the diagrammed position, already several moves into the analysis, it looks as if his 26th move allows White to pick kup a knight and bishop for a rook.

Even strong club players might not note the resource on Black's 27th, based on threats of mate on White's back rank.

World championship is an iceberg with most of the possibilities deep below the surface.

Tommorw, the gladiators will face each other again.

SHORT IN LEAD

Remarkable score

Nigel Short, 19, is leading Lev Alburt by $3\frac{1}{2}$-$1\frac{1}{2}$ in the match between the British and American chess champions in Foxboro, Mass. The score is the more remarkable because the two have almost identical world gradings.

The match in America is for the best of eight games, which will all be played. One more win would give Short victory in the match. In the fourth game, Alburt seemed to have a promising attack, which he must have misplayed, and Short turned the scales with a furious counter-attack.

SANDRINGHAM RUN

Three thousand runners are expected to take part in a mini-marathon over a 13-mile course on the Queen's Sandringham Royal Estate on May 26.

Obituary

Griffith Sandy, who has died, aged 84, was a WESTERN MORNING NEWS staff photographer who won a national award for the best news photograph of the year in 1936. His picture of the Herzogin Lelille 3,100 tons, a four-masted Finnish schooner wrecked off the Devon coast, showed the crew being rescued by breeches buoy to the clifftop. He took his picture hanging over the cliff with a colleague holding his legs.

WAY OF THE WORLD

A Special Factor

IT is no accident that while more and more striking miners are returning to work in most of the British coalfields, the miners of South Wales remain "solid." The long-established radical loyalties of the miners of the Valleys are reinforced by a feeling of nationalism which may not even be conscious, but must certainly be there.

Plaid Cymru, the Welsh Nationalist party, which has been moving leftwards for some time now, has declared its support for the strike and its activists are doing all they can both to help relief work for miners' families and to promote nationalist feeling.

The leftward shift of the Welsh Nationalist party, which under the leadership of its Catholic founder, the writer Saunders Lewis (now 91 and overdue for a Nobel Prize), used to be admirably reactionary, concentrating on "cultural" nationalism and the defence of the Welsh language, has caused this column, with some repining, to withdraw its support.

Few of the striking miners of South Wales speak their own language, though the not very remote ancestors of most of them certainly did. If they still spoke Welsh this column would be in a state of agonising confusion, leading to internal strife and even mental civil war, with the danger of intervention by outside powers.

So for that trivial reason, though most emphatically for no other, it may be just as well that the ancient and noble language of Wales is no longer commonly spoken in the Valleys.

Noble Deeds

"FIREMEN wearing breathing apparatus," it is reported, "burst into a smoke-filled house" at Smethwick where a bedroom was on fire and found a woman and her two daughters watching television in a room downstairs. "They were all very relaxed," said a fireman. "One of them was even puffing on a cigarette . . . I shouted: 'Come on, you've got to get out!' They just said: 'Oh, all right'."

This account is disputed by the people concerned. According to one version, the woman explained that they had merely left the television on while moving to another room. In another version the woman is quoted as saying in a dignified way: "We stayed inside because we had complete faith in the firemen."

Surely no such explanations are needed for what many people would regard as a steadfast devotion to television amounting to heroism and deserving medals all round.

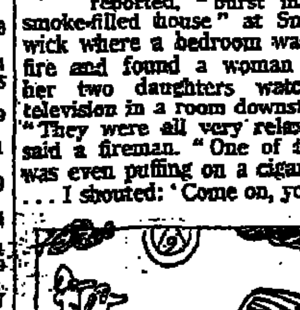
The bravery of these people, admirable though it is, does not quite equal the noblest exploits in this kind. Many will remember the case of Mr J. S. Stunn of Soup Hales (a cousin of Arthur Stunn of Nerdley, the man they call "Mr Seatbelt") and his wife Edna.

Their house caught fire while they were watching "Spot the Moron" on G P I television one evening in February 1975. Urged by neighbours, firemen, social psychiatric workers and eventually high council officials to leave, they nobly refused. In a fine gesture of defiance, Mr Stunn turned up the television to maximum volume, drowning the pleas of would-be helpers and the crackling flames.

Their heroism was rewarded by what some thought a miracle. Suddenly torrents of rain fell out of a clear sky, extinguishing the flames and eventually putting their house under three feet of water. The intrepid pair went on watching the now floating but miraculously functioning television.

Later, at a moving ceremony at Paralysis House in London, Sir Godfrey Fobster, chairman of G P I, presented them with the Golden Shield of Valour, the Network's supreme award.

As he read out the citation ("with a devotion and courage beyond the call of duty . . .") everybody was in tears except Mr and Mrs Stunn, whose eyes were fixed on a television set showing "the Ron Giggling Quiz Show," at the far end of the gilded and sumptuously upholstered "V I P" saloon.



Medical Note

AN expert on ammunition production at the Royal Ordnance Factory has been sent to jail for six years for stealing huge quantities of bullets and hoarding them at home. He did this not for terrorist purposes but out of "collector's mania."

Dr John Henbane, chief "Way of the World" Medical Correspondent, comments: This impulse to collect ammunition, or Krupp's Syndrome, as we medicos call it after a well-known German sufferer, is not so uncommon as the layman may imagine.

In my early days as a G P I came across several patients who had somehow contracted this distressing complaint. Its causes, or aetiology as we brethren of the stethoscope call it, are still obscure. Nor do we know for certain whether it is infectious. It can occur among both men and women.

One woman patient of mine, I recall, came to me in the first place because her husband, who worked in a small "art" handmade bullet factory, gave her a set of ornamental bullets as a wedding anniversary present, jokingly suggesting that "they might come in handy some time." Little did he know what trouble he was storing up for himself!

This patient complained of an irresistible impulse to collect ammunition — bullets at first, then shells of larger and larger calibre, until she was actually hoarding huge railway-gun shells of the "Big Bertha" type. She had an uncanny ability to "sniff them out," to use a medical term, in the most unlikely places, such as tea-rooms, and was "worried to death" by the problem of hiding them at home so that her husband would not find them.

Inevitably the whole lot went up one morning when she was in my surgery, causing widespread damage. All I could do was prescribe a mild sedative, plenty of rest and, above all, advise her to avoid going anywhere near ordnance factories.

Krupp's Syndrome is still a major medical puzzle-point, though luckily people tend not to leave bullets lying about as much as they once did. But I know for a fact that the back-room boffins are working all out on a miracle drug which will put paid to this scourge, and I have no doubt, no doubt at all, that one fine morning they'll come up with the answer.

New arrivals on the travel scene

BY HILARY ALEXANDER

TRAVELLERS, according to insiders in the luggage business, break down into two distinct types: the packers and the crammers.

Packers are those who methodically fold and roll their clothes into a suitcase. Their unpacking reveals a minimum of creases. Crammers, on the other hand, work on the two-into-one must go principle — stuffing, shoving and, finally, roping the entire family in to sit on the case to get it closed.

Samsonite, who has just launched its 1985 range of luggage, offers inside information to the latter on how to pack a successful suitcase.

First, pack dresses or skirts which are more likely to crease. Let the bottoms of long skirts and dresses hang out until the case is full, then fold them over.

Fold lingerie, blouses and T-shirts lengthwise and roll up; folds will be less noticeable.

Pack shoes (wrapped in shoemitts) and other heavy items at the bottom of the case, opposite the handle. Put socks or stockings inside shoes to save space.

Put jackets on hangers, button up and place face down. Fold sleeves diagonally backwards. (Special folding devices are available.)

Family travel calls for luggage that is hard-wearing, lightweight and functional and Samsonite's new "Rhapsody" range is particularly appropriate. It is in a black and grey colour scheme this year, which will not show the scuffs. Black/maroon and brown / beige colour schemes are also available.

The range is made of polyamide with durable PVC piping. The zippers are guaranteed for two years. There are four wheeled suitcases and a selection of co-ordinated smaller bags ideal for weekends, overnighting or for last-minute toys and books.

New styles include a U-shaped shoulder bag and a boxy beauty case with handle and shoulder strap, which will double as a handbag.

Those searching for a suitcase with retractable wheels will be glad to hear that French luggage firm, Delsey, has "re-invented" the wheel.

Delsey's well-known "trolley case" has been off the market for some three-and-a-half years. It re-emerges this season with a new look and a new undercarriage. The case is designed to be pulled from behind by a T-shaped handle. Pull the handle up and two wheels appear; push it back down and the wheels fold back into the body.

The "trolley case" is rigid, made from a tough, heat-moulded man-made fibre. It is available in black, metallic bronze, ivory, claret and navy blue.

For a more classic and stylishly old-fashioned look, there is the Bridge collection of grips, duffle bags and overnight bags in rustic "antiquated" leather. These are hand-made in Florence and feature brass studs, locks and clips.

And for the crammers there is the latest collection from Mulberry with a Colonial theme. These are big, soft and squashy bags and cases in tough canvas with zip tops, leather tabs and webbing details.

Mulberry's soft, large "Colonial Canvas" suitcase and smaller khaki canvas holdall, both with webbing straps and handles, £110·50 and £79·50, available from The Mulberry Shop, 11-12 Gees Court, St Christopher's Place, London W1; Austin Reed, Regent Street, London W1 and Austin Reed mail order.

Beauty case from Samsonite's "Rhapsody" range, in black and grey with handle and shoulder strap, £43·50.

Hanging: U.S. Army-style "saddle bag" in brown leather with webbing strap and printed military motifs, £145 from Liberty, Regent Street, London W1.

Co-pilot bag with top opening access, handle and shoulder strap, from Samsonite's "Transit" range, £52.

"Trolley Case" with retractable wheels by Delsey, 28in. size £109, from Revelation, Piccadilly, London W1; D. H. Evans, Oxford Street, London W1; Barkers of Kensington, London W8; Rackhams, Birmingham; Lewis's, Manchester; Frasers, Glasgow.

The debut of a teenage talent

By Robin Stringer

ANY young woman making her debut with a leading ballet company would be delighted to get reviews describing her as "as natural and easy a dancer as she is an actor . . . with no apparent technical problems—a dancer of rare merit . . . ;" and applauding her for the way she "delights by her delicacy and technical ease . . ."

But the clue to what is so exceptional about Katherine Healey, who made her British debut this month in the Festival Ballet's "Nutcracker" at the Festival Hall in London, lies in one leading critic's praise of the way she danced "with the freshness of a girl."

She could hardly do otherwise — for this 15-year-old from Brooklyn (pictured left) is a rare prodigy, deserving the label of "American wunderkind," not only for her dance prowess, but for her already-established international status as an ice skater and actress.

Newly appointed the Festival Ballet's youngest-ever principal dancer, her other performing experience ranges from international skating with John Curry and Robin Cousins to acting, as a 12-year-old, opposite Dudley Moore and Mary Tyler Moore in the film "Six Weeks," when she played a girl dying of leukaemia.

"Dancing is what really matters to me," she said, "but I intend to stay on at high school in New York until I am 17. Then, in 18 months' time, I will come and stay in London — if they still want me."

Contracted to the Festival Ballet for two years, she will be with the company on its visit to Monte Carlo during her Easter vacation and is back again in May to prepare for the company's summer season in London. In the summer, she is already ear-marked to dance Juliet in Sir Frederick Ashton's production of "Romeo and Juliet" and the title role in "Coppelia."

Both her lawyer father, Walter and her mother Margaret, give their only daughter every encouragement and frequently travel across the Atlantic to be with her.

She showed promise amazingly early. "I started skating at two years eight months," she recalled precisely. "It was something to do for fun and my mother wanted me to have some exercise. When I was four, I saw Rudolf Nureyev in 'I am a Dancer' and then all I wanted to do was to be a ballet dancer."

Progress was rapid and, after training at the American School of Ballet, she entered at 14 the prestigious Varna Competition, in Bulgaria (usually dominated by East European dancers), and waltzed away with a gold medal.

She is entering another competition in June — she swears it will be her last —the Fifth International Ballet Competition in Moscow. She will be partnered there by another new recruit to the Festival Ballet, young Frenchman, Patrick Armand, together with whom she has made such an impression in "Nutcracker."

Her arrival at the Festival Ballet owes everything to the company's new young Danish director, Peter Schaufuss.

He saw her dancing at the Spoleto Festival in Italy last summer and recognised her "tremendous talent."

The admiration is mutual. Said Miss Healey of her new employer (explaining her decision to commit herself to Festival Ballet): "Peter Schaufuss is the first person who has taken me as more than a mere technical trickster. I love the company."

BOSKY
MUCH MORE IN ONE

EATING IN — BY JANET LAURENCE

Spicing up our winter days with foreign flavours

THIS IS the lean and hungry time of winter, a time for food that will nurture both budgets and bodies. Eating traditions in countries used to making the most of a little, such as Italy, China, Mexico, can produce tasty ideas.

Fish lasagne is delicious. Pasta is a good friend to the budget-conscious cook. It goes a long way and needs very little fish or meat for a tasty sauce. Buy a good variety and remember that wholewheat pasta is more nutritious.

Chinese techniques for quickly frying slivers of meat with similar-sized vegetables, as in Stir-Fry Chicken with Mushrooms and Artichokes, produces a dish that stints on meat but never on flavour.

Pulses, dried peas and beans are cheap sources of protein and are used in many ethnic dishes. Spicy Mexican Chilli con Carne uses red kidney beans; quantity can be adjusted according to taste and availability of meat. Do remember to boil the soaked beans hard for ten minutes before simmering to tenderness, as this destroys their toxins. Canned beans are ready cooked.

Pork with Red Cabbage has its origins in Europe. Its tangy sauce and robust flavour will dispel any winter blues instantly.

These recipes make use of a judiciously stocked storecupboard. Good quality mango chutney, dried mushrooms and concentrated tomato purée, Worcestershire sauce, anchovy sauce, soy sauce, unrefined oil and wine or sherry vinegar all add interest to economy cooking.

All recipes serve four.

THE RECIPES

FISH LASAGNE

INGREDIENTS:

Approx. 6oz lasagne pasta
2 garlic cloves, crushed
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
12oz white fish (cod, coley, hake, etc.)
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ pint water
6 peppercorns
½ bay leaf
Salt
1½ tablespoons tomato purée
1 tablespoon anchovy sauce
8oz petits pois, thawed
½ pint natural yogurt mixed with 2 teaspoons cornflour
1oz butter or margarine
1oz flour
½ pint milk
Small quantity dried crumbs

METHOD:

Pre-cook lasagne pasta in boiling water, and dry it on a clean cloth. Place fish in one layer in a shallow dish, pour in water, lemon juice and vinegar; add peppercorns, bay leaf, a little salt; poach in oven, 375F (Gas 5), 10 to 15min or until fish is just cooked. Strain off liquid and reserve; flake fish. Heat oil gently, add garlic, cook for few min, add tomato purée, blend in cooking liquid then yogurt mixture; bring slowly to boil, stirring continuously; simmer for 2min. Add anchovy sauce and check seasoning. Remove from heat, add peas. Make a smooth sauce from fat, flour and milk; season. In lightly-greased shallow dish place layer of fish sauce, pasta, fish, fish sauce, etc., ending with layer of pasta. Spread white sauce over last layer, sprinkle with crumbs. Reheat at 400F (Gas 6) for 25min. Allow to stand for 5min before serving with green salad.

STIR-FRY CHICKEN WITH MUSHROOMS AND ARTICHOKES

INGREDIENTS:

1 clove garlic, crushed with salt
1 tablespoon soy sauce
12oz boneless chicken breasts, thinly sliced
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 large onion, thinly sliced
3 stalks celery, thinly sliced
2 medium-sized carrots, sliced
1lb artichokes, peeled, cut in matchstick-sized strips
½lb button mushrooms, thinly sliced
2 dried mushrooms soaked in ½ pint boiling water for 20min, mushrooms sliced and soaking water strained (or ½ pint boiling water)
3 tablespoons finely-chopped fresh parsley
Salt and pepper
2 tablespoons medium sherry or 1 tablespoon sherry vinegar
1 teaspoon cornflour mixed with 1 tablespoon cold water

METHOD:

Add garlic to chicken strips with soy sauce and toss to mix. Heat oil in wok or large frying pan and lightly and quickly fry chicken strips until they change colour; remove and keep warm. Add onion to pan, fry for 2min, stirring all the time, add remaining vegetables with seasoning and stir-fry 7 to 8min until just cooked. Replace chicken, add strained mushroom liquid or boiling water and parsley. Push food to side of pan, add sherry and cornflour mixture, stirring until slightly thickened and clear. Check seasoning and serve immediately with brown rice.

CHILLI CON CARNE

INGREDIENTS:

2 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 large onions, chopped
2 teaspoons chilli or cayenne powder
4 dried red chillies, seeds removed, soaked in boiling water for 15min, and chopped (check pungency by tasting a little piece, adjust quantity as necessary)
1lb minced beef
14 to 16oz tin peeled tomatoes
2 tins red kidney beans, drained, or 6 to 8oz dried red kidney beans, soaked and cooked in fresh water until tender
1 medium-sized green pepper and 1 medium-sized red pepper, seeds and pith removed, chopped
1 bay leaf

METHOD:

Heat oil and cook onions gently until soft. Add chilli/cayenne pepper, cook for 2min, stirring. Raise heat, add soaked, chopped chillies and meat and brown all over. Add tinned tomatoes with juices, drained kidney beans, chopped peppers, bay leaf, seasoning; cover pan and either cook very gently on top of stove or place in oven at 300F (Gas 2) for 2hr until meat is very tender. Check the liquid is not drying out and add water if necessary. Skim off excess fat. Serve with green vegetables and plain potatoes, or good wholewheat bread.

PORK WITH RED CABBAGE

INGREDIENTS:

1oz butter or margarine
1½lb red cabbage, thinly sliced
2 apples, cored and sliced
1 dessertspoon carraway seed
2 tablespoons wine vinegar
1 dessertspoon golden syrup
Salt and pepper
1½ to 2lb lean belly of pork, boneless, cut in thick slices and rind removed
2 tablespoons mango chutney
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon tomato ketchup
½ tablespoon soy sauce
1 tablespoon French mustard
Salt and pepper

METHOD:

Heat butter or margarine, add cabbage, apples, carraway seed, vinegar, syrup and seasoning and stir well together. Cook gently for 30min. Place in a wide dish and add pork slices in one layer on top of cabbage. Mix together remaining ingredients and spread half over pork slices. Cover with tin foil, place in oven at 325F (Gas 3) for 1½hr or until pork is tender. After 1hr spread over remaining sauce and remove lid; raise heat to 375F (Gas 5) for last 10min of cooking. Serve with creamed or baked potatoes.

LORDS IN CAMERA

NOTWITHSTANDING THE DECORATIONS offered for its inaugural day on television, including a characteristic speech by the Earl of STOCKTON, it is hard to avoid concluding that on the whole the House of Lords have bought a pup. Television has become too professional — and too polished — to be a safe conduit for an institution where informal style, very mixed performances and indispensable idiosyncrasy are the dishes of every day. The artistry of the Earl of STOCKTON (who has forgotten more about television performances than most of their lordships will ever learn) will, alas, not be available every day. The decision to put him on is suggestive. The programme needed a star.

It will run like this for a while. The noble lords, though less exposed to public comment than MPs, will discover soon enough how people are taking it. Improvements in presentation will suggest themselves. Television will be most ready to oblige. No institution, no individual (starting without disrespect with the Sovereign herself) is immune from the special requirements of this powerful medium — and they are special — which has to shape what it seeks to portray to its own format. That is for the future.

It is not difficult to comprehend why the Lords have taken this course. Thanks in large measure to the advent of Life Peers (for which Mr MACMILLAN was responsible) the upper House has become an assembly far different from the portrait which its critics like to implant in the public eye. And this is not to disparage the contributions made by younger hereditary peers, which are often distinguished — and lower the average age. More often than not, wiser things are said more temperately in the Lords than in today's Commons. Why should the public be kept in ignorance of these virtues? Those are sentiments we share. More questionable is whether this marriage of sagacity to the screen will lead to the results that noble lords desire. Mystery is out of fashion, but the older British institutions, including the Lords, still depend on just a whiff of it. There was nothing mysterious about yesterday's offering on the screen.

BAD COMPANY

THE VIOLENT DISPUTE which has blown up over the fact that Mr GERRY MCLOUGHLIN, a convicted Irish terrorist, has been allowed to visit the Commons twice within the past three months is getting somewhat out of hand. A prison sentence once served imposes no continuing civil disabilities. Whether MCLOUGHLIN and his likes should be free to roam the streets is a question which relates to sentencing policy. What is certain is that once freed from prison they cannot properly be excluded from the precincts of Parliament simply by virtue of their former crimes. Visiting Parliament, however MPs may choose to represent that treat to their constituents, is not in practice a high privilege to be conferred only on the worthy and the sane. It is a right shared, among others, by every eccentric, lunatic and scoundrel not currently under the constraint of the law, within the kingdom. It is very important that this principle should be preserved.

Security at Westminster is a quite different matter, and one of supreme importance. When people of suspect motives enter the place, the authorities should be warned in advance in order that proper surveillance may be maintained. Anything which can be done to improve arrangements in this respect should be welcomed. Yet a third distinct consideration is whether MPs behaved prudently or even decently in seeking or tolerating conversation with people like MCLOUGHLIN. The simple answer is that they do not. As the Labour leadership no doubt clearly realises, this kind of bad company does the party grievous harm. But that would be so whether the venue were Transport House, the Savoy or anywhere else. We plead only for recognition that who shall be allowed to enter the House of Commons is a separate issue, one of immense importance and one which should not be clouded by emotions, however righteous.

TOO MANY DIPLOMATS

THE FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE of the Commons has done well enough in its criticism of the Foreign Office in respect of the murder of WPc FLETCHER by a Libyan covered by diplomatic privilege. But the description by Sir ANTHONY KERSHAW's committee of the Home Office's conduct as "swift and robust" is downright feeble. How robust can you be on your knees? However, the committee spells out some information, widely guessed at but useful to have tabulated, about the general abuse of diplomatic privilege. The gentlemen in feathered hats have run up a total of 71,000 unpaid parking tickets in a year. They commit on average one crime a week which, without the teflon coating against law granted to diplomats, would attract a sentence of at least six months' imprisonment. Finally, there are 15,000 people in London with this diplomatic status. Incidentally 55 of these were in the Libyan Embassy. Let us go some distance beyond the committee, which sensibly proclaims the propriety of using electronic scanners on diplomatic bags in certain circumstances.

We have too many embassies (88 at a rough count compared with half a dozen 70 years ago). We have too many diplomats abroad ourselves, however impeccable their respect for the Zambian equivalent of a double yellow line. The Foreign Office is naturally committed to a policy of justifying its numbers, alternately pleading its commercial role (which can be doubted) and piping insistently "we have a role to play on the world stage." This justifies our vast palazzo in Washington, which failed to spot the Grenada invasion, and costs more than the Treasury in Whitehall. Justification of numbers works reciprocally. Too many Embassies manned by too many people in London are the warrant for the Foreign Office's own overmanning.

We will lose little and we will be freer to reform and cut down foreign representation in London if we make sharp reforms ourselves. How much of the Foreign Office's commercial work cannot be overseen by the Department of Trade? What is wrong with a small Ministry (not a depart*ment) concerned with External and Consular* Affairs? It would injure amour propre, but it would be appropriate to what we need. The diminished diplomatic presence in London will carry its own benefits, chiefly to the police.

Can the Pope save 'liberation theology' from the devil?

As the Papal visit to Central America focuses attention on divisions in the Church of Rome, JONATHAN PETRE looks at the Vatican's problems with Marx

THE bombshell dropped by the Vatican last autumn in the form of a critique of liberation theology was hardly unexpected. Friction between a theologically conservative Pope, and the radical, often turbulent, priests who have been politicising the Church's message in Latin America had become increasingly apparent.

Hostilities opened in earnest at the end of 1983 when Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, who heads the influential Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, the Vatican's watchdog of Roman Catholic orthodoxy, aired his considerable doubts about the direction taken by the radicals in an Italian magazine interview.

Return fire duly came from a group of leading liberal theologians calling itself "Concilium," which accused the Vatican of orchestrating a smear campaign against some of the leading exponents of the new theology, including one of its most controversial founders, the Peruvian Father Gustavo Gutierrez.

In the event, the Vatican summoned a moderate, the Brazilian Father Leonardo Boff, to be "tried" for his dissident views by the Congregation. The questioning took place just four days after the release of the critique which had been published prematurely after it had been leaked to the Press.

Despite speculation that the confrontation might turn out to be a re-run of Galileo versus the Inquisition, both sides parted relatively amicably, with honours even, and a verdict on Boff's book "Church, Charisma and Power" is expected early this year.

The Vatican's critique, however, was not aimed at any individual theologian in particular; its purpose, rather, was to judge a whole movement. Its publication on Sept. 3, in a glare of publicity, brought into focus the long-running debate over the role of religion in politics, and particularly in the revolution*ary brand of politics encountered* in Latin America and elsewhere. More fundamentally, it has highlighted the conviction in the Vati*can that the Catholic faith and* Marxism can never peacefully co-exist.

WHEREAS traditional theology has had little to say about political issues, liberation theology is primarily concerned with changing the "structures" of society which, when translated, means politics.

Adherents insist that liberation theology, rather than being imposed from above, has emerged from the political situation and has latched on to universal human aspirations for freedom and justice.

But in this transformation of the Christian message, the desire for salvation by God through one's actions becomes the desire for liberation from one's worldly oppressors. Equally, the traditional emphasis on individual sin and private morality is shifted on to "social" sin, depicted as inherent in a number of Right-wing régimes.

The language and many of the underlying ideas of liberation theology have been borrowed from Marxism. Some theologians go as far as to say that the poor of the Gospel are the proletariat of "Das Kapital."

Not only is the divisive concept of class struggle integrated into liberation theology, but many of the more radical adherents also accept Marx's insistence on the necessity of violence as the only means to counter the "inbuilt violence" of oppressive régimes.

Liberation theology, therefore, is ideal for those seeking a justification to provide more than mere moral support for revolution. In Latin America, many priests who have set up "base" communities in the shanty towns to organise development for the poor have also established contacts with Marxist-inspired guerrillas.

Many priests were actively involved in the bloody coup which swept the Sandinista government to power in Nicaragua in 1979. The Government has increasingly fallen out with the Church hierarchy. Yet, despite a series of Papal admonitions, four priests still hold senior Ministerial positions.

The political repercussions of liberation theology have been widespread. Not only has it pushed the Church into confrontation with many régimes in Latin America, but it is also a growing force in Africa and south-east Asia.

But however seriously the politicians view the consequences of this radicalism, Pope John Paul II is more concerned with its theological and theoretical aberrations. His aim appears to be to counter the Marxist trends in liberation theology without destroying its generous commitment to the poor. His dilemma is reflected in the Vatican's critique which is ambiguous enough to provide comfort for both sides in the debate.

The document concentrates its fire on the "deviations" which, it says, are inherent in those aspects of liberation theology which use Marxist thinking "in a way that is insufficiently critical." However valid the concept of liberation is, the use of concepts such as the class struggle must ultimately divide the Church.

"Let us recall," the critique says in one of its key passages, "the fact that atheism and the denial of human rights are at the core of Marxist theory."

The present Pope, with his roots in Eastern Europe, has particular reason for distrusting Communist ideologies. It is partly as a result of his background that he regards the nascent, grass roots movement in Latin America as a seed from which, potentially, monolithic Marxist régimes could grow, shunt*ing aside the Church in the pro*cess. The Pope's experience leads him to believe that the Church will have more difficulty trying to influence Communism, with its atheist ideology, than nearly any other form of political system. And he is worried that any theology which borrows its concepts from Marx risks encouraging the formation of the full-blooded Communist State.

The Pope also has a number of theological objections to Marxism. He opposes Marx's outright denial of the transcendental nature of man. He rejects the Marxist view that human alienation is a problem capable of a political solution alone. For the Pope, social sin is the consequence of individual sin, not the other way around. He further fervently disagrees with the concept of the class struggle.

The Vatican critique is particularly scathing when it comes to the Marxist theory of knowledge which holds that anyone not involved in the revolutionary praxis is automatically excluded from understanding what is going on. Thus priests committed to the revolution can dismiss the criticisms of the bishops and the Pope as irrelevant, undermining the Church's hierarchical structure of authority.

ONE senior Vatican official has put many Churchmen's views in a nutshell. "Marxism," he said, "is like buying a Bourbon wig—it's been tried but it's not practicable. I want to talk to a fellow who has been found trying to get over the wall into East Berlin."

The Vatican is already in the *process of drafting a second docu*ment, the purpose this time being to emphasise the "positive aspects" of liberation theology. Radicals fear the Pope will water down the political and revolutionary content in order to stress the authority of Rome. Others see this as the only realistic course for a Pope determined to prevent the Church spinning out of control.

The next few months will be crucial. Liberation theology is an unexploded bomb: if the Pope fails to defuse it, it could spark off a long and acrimonious struggle for the very soul of the Roman Catholic Church.

'Foul sluttish hair' –by Thatcher

BEARDED TORY MPs with hopes of entering the Government should reach for their razors as, I learn, Mrs Thatcher has developed a strong antipathy to bearded men.

She surprised friends over drinks at Downing Street the other evening by stating unequivocally: "I wouldn't tolerate any minister of mine wearing a beard."

Three Tory MPs sport beards: Gregory Knight, Robert Jones and Jeremy Hayes. All are new boys elected last year and all remain very firmly on the backbenches.

One man who has read the Prime Minister's mind correctly is the chairman of the Conservative Party John Selwyn Gummer. As a young MP he used to have a rather straggly ginger beard.

Since shaving it off a few years ago his career has been nothing short of meteoric.

Kirby's sting

ONE OF the least defensible price increases yet perpetuated by the ever money-hungry British Rail has just come to light. At a stroke BR's Southern Region has increased its parking charges at commuter stations by as much as 70 per cent.

The new charges, which of course come on top of the six per cent. January fare increase, mean that it now costs 50p a day (formerly 30-35p a day) or £9 a month (formerly £5-£5·50 a month) to park at even some of the most remote Southern Region commuter stations. And since BR has a captive market, there is nothing the customer can do about it.

Southern Region told me yesterday: "If there is a demand for space and we can get money for it, we must make as much out of it as possible. It is a question of market forces." I urge David Kirby, the General Manager of Southern *Region, to ask his business mana*gers to think again.

In perspective

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL recently opened an account with a Hemel Hempstead firm and when asked to supply a trade reference gave, rather charmingly, the name of its organ builder, J. W. Walker of Suffolk.

In due course a credit questionnaire arrived at Walker's offices and the firm's director, Bruce Walker, wrote in reply:

Rochester Cathedral is the regional headquarters of an organisation founded originally in Rome some 2,000 years ago . . . and we can understand your anxiety about the avowedly non-trading nature of the organisation but this does not seem to us to be any disadvantage.

They are very confident of the future, though their prospectus does declare that they will go into voluntary liquidation when their Principal eventually returns. We believe, in fact, that this same Principal will be interested in our own stewardship at that time, as well as in yours.

The credit rating was granted.

LONDON DAY BY DAY

A particularly grim joke now doing the rounds in Prague says more than anything else about the state of mind in unhappy Czechoslovakia today. It goes "Advice for living. Don't think. If you think don't speak. If you speak don't write. If you write don't sign. And if you sign don't be surprised."

Getting more personal

THE "personalised" computer letters continue to flow in. Pamela, Marchioness of Huntly, has sent me one she received from Marshall Cavendish who were trying to sell her a cookery book. It began: "Dear of Huntly."

And Vice-Admiral Jocelyn Salter has dropped me a line to say he has lost count of the number of times he has received letters from one company addressed to "Dear Mr Vice." But he did draw the line when he was sent a refund cheque from the same source made payable to "Ms Admiral."

Historian's legacy

SIR ARTHUR BRYANT, the historian whose first of many books (King Charles II) appeared 54 years ago and who died yesterday, suffered none of the infirmities of mind which sometimes accompany the age of 85.

On the contrary, a matter of weeks ago when walking briskly back from a commemoration service in Winchester Cathedral with a senior member of this staff he explained: "Let me write you an article about this scandalous threat to put VAT on books."

His offer was accepted. A lively article appeared on this page on December 7 last. Not a bad last sentiment from such a prolific writer.

Political judgments

LABOUR MPs have been delighted by comments by Brian Walden, himself a former Labour MP who abandoned the Commons for the television studios, that Neil Kinnock is "a television genius" and is becoming "a great man."

The Leader of the Opposition's opponents have been pointing out that he accepted an invitation to be interviewed on Walden's "Weekend World" last Sunday.

Mrs Thatcher, however, who is a far bigger fish for prestigious current affairs programmes, has not appeared on it for more than a year and has no plans to do so.

Ringside seat

NOT CONTENT with one innovation this week, I learn that 24 hours before the House of Lords allowed television into their chamber, they introduced another new scheme — allowing daughters of peers as well as sons to sit on the steps of the throne during debates.

*The source of the new dispensa*tion was the Lords' current centre of attention, the Earl of Stockton, who wanted the change so that his grand-daughters could watch from there.

Male heirs have long been accorded the right to sit on the steps on the sensible grounds of giving them useful experience and now the appropriate sub-committee has sanctioned the change. Stockton's granddaughters were however beaten to the spot — the first to take advan*tage of the ruling on Tuesday was* Lady Susan Helen of Mar, the Mistress of Mar and heiress to her mother, the 31st Countess of Mar.

Following my notes about moments of embarrassment, a former nurse tells me of the day she met one of her old patients—by her account a handsome young man—whom she greeted with the remark: "Hello, I hardly recognised you. I've only ever seen you in bed."

Staggering decor

THE FINANCIAL TIMES concluded a recent report on the Scotch Malt Whisky Society: "The society headquarters is in an ancient wine vault in Edinburgh's Leith district. A whisky museum will open there along with restaurant, pub and a magnificently plastered members' lounge."

PETERBOROUGH

SELECTING TORY CANDIDATES

SIR—Prof. Richard Rose in his interesting article on the selectorate (Jan. 18) gives a mere few words to the role of the Conservative party's approved list.

The majority of those selected to fight seats for the Conservatives are drawn from that list.

The rôle of the list in "the selectorate" is terribly important as it provides the bulk of people interviewed by the constituencies.

It is no secret that a putative candidate has to work hard if he or she wants to join the list. One is expected to devote time and energy to all types of political work as well as showing an interest in the community and general ability.

Indeed the candidate must even be assessed by a number of party members *during an arduous and exacting week*end.

The approved list may seem to create an élite group but it ensures that possible candidates have been chosen by a varied set of party workers, only after they have proved their commitment.

Open to all

SIR—You are to be congratulated on your initiative in commissioning the Gallup Poll on the question of candidate reselection. But why does your commentary (Jan. 19) state simply that the results "could have important implications for the Labour party"? Why not for the Conservative party, too?

As Prof. Richard Rose said in his article the previous day, more Conservative associations are now giving a choice of candidate to meetings open to all their members, rather than the select few who have that privilege inside the Labour party. It has to be said, however, that that choice for Conservatives is still exercisable on rare occasions only, being dependent on death or voluntary retirement of the sitting member, or a major boundary adjustment.

The Conservative "Charter Movement" has long argued for an end to automatic re-adoption of candidates. We do so because automatic re-adoption is fundamentally undemocratic. While this has until now been treated by the party as a minority view, your survey has clearly established it as the majority opinion. It is inconceivable that the million or so Conservative party members in the constituencies think differently on such a matter from the public at large and experience makes it clear that they do not.

The conclusion is surely striking. A majority of Conservative party members want to be involved directly in the selection process and they want that process to happen regularly and not just when there is no alternative. If we are not to treat our members with less regard than we have now forced upon the trade unions in the treatment of theirs, the Conservative party must begin to change its ways.

We must surely now begin to reduce Central Office domination and start to enhance the role of our members. We must practise democracy and not just preach it.

Final decision

SIR — Prof. Richard Rose says in his article: "In Conservative constituency associations, responsibility is concentrated in a standing committee and the executive council."

As far as the association of which I am an officer is concerned, however, this is only a half-truth.

It is true that candidates are selected initially by a selection committee of the executive council, but the final decision is made by a general meeting of the entire membership of the whole association (in the case of a Parliamentary election) or of the ward branch of the association (in the case of a council election), on a one-man/woman, one vote basis, and which is entirely free to reject or accept the committee's recommendation.

Incidentally, there is no provision in the rules for any discrimination ("negative" or "positive") on the grounds of sex, colour, ethnic origin, class, sexual orientation, disability and so on.

I see much significance in the fact that the Labour party, which makes such easily refutable claims to be democratic, anti-racist and anti-sexist and all the rest of it, is having such difficulty in establishing a system for choosing its candidates on a one-woman/man vote basis and without regard to all these categories.

Perhaps if it stopped classifying and categorising people so much (as is evidenced by its persistent references to "the working-class," despite its never having been able to provide a satisfactory definition of that term), but treated them as individuals, it might have more success.

The Conservative party has staked out the ground and the other parties are tiptoeing towards it.

Obligation to the Poles in exile

SIR—The suggestions made in the House of Commons by Mr John Stokes and Mr Enoch Powell that representatives from Poland and Russia should be invited to attend any function organised by the Government in conjunction with the VE Day anniversary needs clarification.

It must be remembered that throughout the war, the Government of Poland was based in London. The puppet Lublin Committee set up by the Russians was not recognised by Britain as the de facto government of Poland until after the war, and at no time did it have either a political or strategic role within the counsels of the allies.

Before getting too lavish in the dis*tribution of invitations, we should* remember that the West remains under obligation to the London Poles and the Government in Exile: equally, we should not forget that Poland still remains under Russian dominance and oppression. There was scant gratitude shown by Stalin for the wartime help given to him by Britain: we should also remember the sacrifices made by our sailors on the convoys to Murmansk.

Guards ceremonial

SIR—Reports about ceremonial drill with the Army's new rifle demonstrate that someone in the Ministry of Defence still cherishes the Balaclava Earl of Cardigan's outlook. The thought of guardsmen "slapping it about" in front of Buckingham Palace, surrounded by crowds of tourists, with a weapon carrying a telescopic sight and full automatic fire on a 30-round magazine, does not bear discussion.

Since lining ceremonial routes with men carrying battlefield assault rifles is clearly undesirable, why not equip them with ceremonial weapons of the halberd type as carried, I believe, by the Papal Guard?

These are most suitable for discouraging an assassin leaping from a crowd, and could be made even more so if the butt incorporated an easily drawn automatic pistol.

The lethal yet elegant appearance of halberds would add to the crowd-drawing possibilities of the Changing of the Guard. Perhaps in the recesses of the Tower of London they still have a drill manual.

Free too soon

From Prof. NIGEL WALKER

SIR—Mr Ferdinand Mount is right to ridicule Clause 22 of the Prosecution of Offenders Bill, which merely allows the Court of Appeal to declare that a given sentence should have been different, without being able to make it different.

But the remedy is not to delete the clause. It would make more sense to amend it so that the sentence itself could be altered. This is especially desirable when a dangerous offender has received a sentence which will set him free too soon for the safety of others.

The tradition that the prosecution does not seek to influence the sentence has been for many years the only reason for preserving the illogicality of our system of appeals. Most European countries — and some Commonwealth ones, such as Canada—have a two-way system which allows both defence and prosecution the right of appeal against verdict and sentence. When a tradition is dangerous as well as illogical it should be forgotten.

Amusement arcades do not escape controls

SIR — I take great exception to your headline on the Rev. Gordon Moody's article on Jan. 21 concerning amusement arcades. Mr Moody is well known to members of our industry as a puritanical clergyman with a particular hobby horse to ride. It is quite wrong to state that amusement arcades have escaped controls.

The Gaming Act 1968 does include an acknowledgment of amusement arcades and their function. Planning laws do include powers to impose restrictions on all amusement premises. The Public Health Acts do include powers to impose operating conditions.

Last but not least the trade association of amusement arcade owners which represents 80 per cent. of the industry has codes of conduct for both amusement arcades and leisure centres under the terms of which entry is forbidden to juveniles under the age of 16, whether or not accompanied by an adult.

One-armed bandits hardly exist. Most of the equipment used are "Amusement With Prizes" machines which pay out a maximum award of £1·50 cash or £3 in tokens exchangeable for prizes.

Restrictive legislation proposed is, in our opinion, yet another unwarranted intrusion into the freedom of the individual.

We have commissioned an independent *survey of the amusement arcade indus*try to identify precisely what the problem areas are, if any. Under the auspices of the Merseyside Council on Gambling Addiction we have commissioned a similar exercise.

The Gaming and Leisure industry is rigorously controlled and policed by the Gaming Board of Great Britain. The proposed GLC Bill will have the effect of localising amusement legislation in different parts of the country. Anomalies will be created which are not desirable.

Growing investment

From Mr GRAHAM BRIGHT, MP (Con.)

SIR—The recent calls by the Labour party and others for increased capital investment in the economy as a way of stimulating its growth overlook vital facts.

First, public capital expenditure has remained broadly stable in real terms since 1979. Aggregate spending on capital goods and construction is running at £22 billion a year (1982 to 1985 prices).

Second, private sector investment is now at a record level and is still growing. It is actually greater than public sector investment. In manufacturing, it was 15 per cent. up on the 1983 level in 1984 and in construction and services over 12·5 per cent. up.

It is understandable that Socialists and misguided Liberals should seek to misrepresent the situation. They have nothing to gain from recognising that their talk of "massive cuts" in capital expenditure is mistaken.

Supporters of the Government have to make it clear that limitless capital resources do not exist. That is why public expenditure has to be carefully controlled. We should be failing in our duty to the British people if we did not do so. We should fail them just as much if we allow the myth now being peddled to be spread still longer.

GRAHAM BRIGHT

Sir Arthur Bryant, popular historian who loved England

By DAVID HOLLOWAY

SIR ARTHUR BRYANT, the most widely read historian of his age, died in New Hall Hospital in Salisbury, Wiltshire, on Tuesday night after a short illness. He was one month short of his 86th birthday.

In 1952 he described his lifetime's work as writing history, adding: "But writing it in such a way as to make it not only true but readable."

It was his adherence to this dictum that made his many books so greatly popular.

Indeed, a survey of reading among Oxford undergraduates in the early 1960s put him at the head of the popularity poll.

Prime Ministers quoted him, and his books, above all the trilogy on England during the Napoleonic Wars written during the Second World War, sold in hundreds of thousands of copies.

His later books, particularly the rather generalised social and political histories of England which he published in various forms, irritated professional historians. The masterly prose in which they were written sometimes masked the rather cavalier view that he took of people and events.

Sir Arthur Bryant.

Two light shed on Pepys

But his early books, notably his first major work, "Charles II" (1931), which rescued the king from just being the "Merrie Monarch" and showed him to be a statesman and a masterly manipulator of men, and his Pepys trilogy could stand beside any historical work of their time.

In a way, Sir Arthur was lucky over Pepys. Two other scholars had turned down the task of writing a biography of the diarist.

He took it on with his customary enthusiasm and working among the Pepys papers at Magdalene College, Cambridge, saw the importance of some previously disregarded papers.

These proved to be a later section of the diary that Pepys had dictated to a fellow civil servant.

This gave an entirely new slant on Pepys's work at the Admiralty and his great importance there. Sir Arthur was able to devote the second and third volume of his biography to these matters.

Sad to say, the Second World War caused the temporary disappearance of the Pepys collection and, though Sir Arthur often announced that he was going to write the fourth and final volume he never got around to it.

Still, with more than 49 other books and a vast amount of journalism written over 55 years, he could scarcely be accused of laziness.

Successor to Chesterton

The central feature of his journalism was the column that he wrote weekly, and, latterly, monthly, in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, under the title "Our Notebook."

Sir Arthur took over this task temporarily when G. K. Chesterton fell ill in 1936. On Chesterton's death soon after, he was asked to continue the column and wrote without a break ever since.

This was an unparalleled feat, certainly in British journalism. Each essay was entirely personal, expressing his love for his country, for the countryside, for good living and for animals (his tame mongoose was for long an occasional subject).

But this was not all. During the Second World War, in addition to the patriotic histories that he wrote, he supplied long series of commentaries for various newspapers.

Of their kind, they were outstanding. This passage was written in 1941:

"To our freedom-loving English minds it seems that the proper judge of how a man should shape his life, his work and his pleasures is not the State — but a man himself. We do not want to be ruled from the cradle to the grave by bureaucrats or Gauleiters. We want, under God and the Law, to rule ourselves."

Proud to be a Victorian

Sir Arthur was born in a house on the Sandringham estate where his father, later to be Sir Francis Bryant, was private secretary to the future King Edward VII and was in all to work for 50 years in the Royal Household.

Sir Arthur was proud to be a Victorian and, on his 80th birthday, said that one of his first memories was of hansom cabs. "The smell of horse dung and hot leather was as all pervasive as the petrol fumes of today."

From Harrow at the age of 18 he went into the Royal Flying Corps and became a pilot in Trenchard's Independent Bomber Force. Later he was to say that he had crashed several bombers and his greatest feat "was to survive."

After a successful time at Queen's College, Oxford, he was offered a variety of occupations. He turned down the idea of a Foreign Office post, an invitation to be A D C to a Colonial governor, a post at Winchester or the editorship of Burke's Peerage. Instead he went to the bar.

Almost immediately he changed direction and at 23 he became the youngest headmaster in England, in charge of the Cambridge Institute of Arts, Crafts and Technology.

Two years later he was doing social work, practising at the bar and lecturing at the Conservative College at Ashridge. His first book, published in 1929, was "The Spirit of Conservatism."

His interest in historical writing was sparked off by the presentation to him by his first wife Sylvia Shakerley of a roomful of 17th- and 18th-century papers belonging to her family. It was from these and from the paucity of briefs that he was receiving that the idea of a biography of Charles II came.

He was an instant bestseller and was soon lecturing widely and showing a new talent by producing historical pageants in Hyde Park and at Greenwich. Sir Arthur was said to be masterly at handling a cast of more than 2,500 amateurs.

Books on many subjects — King George V, relations with America and, most notably, Stanley Baldwin—came in profusion. Though not active in politics, he showed a certain sympathy with Hitler and Franco that was later to cause him to be attacked.

In no way, though, could he be thought unpatriotic. Indeed his abiding passion was for a Britain for ever Great. This much later was to lead him to become one of the principal opponents of Britain joining the Common Market.

Alanbrooke diaries controversy

After the war he was commissioned to write a popular history of the war at sea but the project was never completed. Instead he turned to the editing of Lord Alanbrooke's diaries of his time as Chief of the Imperial General Staff, which appeared with immense success in two volumes as "The Turn of the Tide" and "Triumph in the West."

Sir Arthur's editing, masterly though it was and brilliant in its projection of the importance of Alanbrooke as the keystone of British military success, caused much controversy.

In particular, American military historians resented the implied criticism of some of the diary extracts. Sir Arthur was undaunted.

Despite all his many other tasks, Sir Arthur was a constant lecturer, taker of chairs and a member of many committees. He was always an advocate of the rights of his fellow writers.

In his time as chairman of the Society of Authors, he campaigned for Income Tax reform. And only last month in THE DAILY TELEGRAPH he argued forcefully against the idea of imposing V A T on books.

Sir Arthur, who was knighted in 1954 and made C H in 1967, was married twice and twice divorced. His second wife was Anne Brooke, the niece of the Rajah of Sarawak. There were no children by either marriage.

As works of history, Sir Arthur's books, even the best of them, will be overtaken by later research, but they will continue to be read for the lucidity and the elegance of their prose.

Above all, Sir Arthur loved England and all good things English. Here, in a characteristic way, he is writing about cricket:

"This is what, for Englishmen, cricket does. It draws together, in a little space of time and place, all the diverse arts of love and emulation, conflict and comradeship, patience and boldness, sunshine and shower, city and country, prose and poetry and makes then one."

Under what I am sure Sir Arthur would regard as an English heaven.

PLAN TO EXPAND DOCK OPPOSED

Conservationists who are protesting at a £100 million plan to extend Felixstowe Docks, Suffolk, aim to lobby Parliament and whip up opposition to a scheme which would make Felixstowe Western Europe's biggest container port.

They claim that up to 40 per cent. of the Orwell estuary's birds would have their habitat destroyed by the two-year expansion.

High Court plea for a swan-song

BRITAIN'S swans are dying at an alarming rate—about 5,000 each year from lead poisoning. And today the Nature Conservancy Council is holding a special meeting to decide what to do.

The biggest hazard is the use of lead weights in coarse fishing and anglers organisations as well as the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds an dthe Wild Fowl Trust have been invited to attend.

In the House of Lords yesterday it was stated that legislation might be needed to give the swans further protection than that afforded by the 1981 Wild Life and Countryside Act. And the plight of Swans was mentioned to a High Court judge.

Mr Len Baker, founder of the Norwich-based Swan Rescue Services, asked Mr JUSTICE HODGSON to order the Nature Conservancy Council to invite him to today's meeting.

Mr Keith Hornby, said the "man who knew the most about swans" would not be there as he had not been invited. The judge said he could not understand why Mr Baker was not invited, but he had no jurisdiction to order the council to do so.

Biggest hazard

The council ha dreceived evoidence from Mr Baker relating to the swans' situation up to the end of 1983 and it ewished to update it. The judge said that if Mr Baker submitted a further report, he was sure the council would consider it.

Afterwards Mr Baker, of Shotesham St Mary, Norwich, said his organisation went anywhere in the world to rescue swans. The biggest hazard was the use of lead weights in coarse fishing. eLad poisoning from shooting water game also caused swans' deaths.

"What I really want is for the Nature Conservancy Council to ban lead," he said. It is understood that two companies making anglers' tackle using lead substitute have been invited to the meeting.

Britain is thought to have a swan population of about 18,000.

Later Mr Baker went to the Court of Appeal but Lord Justice PARKER dismissed his appeal and held he had no legal right to atend tomorrow's meeting.

SKIMMED MILK SALES MORE THAN DOUBLE

Skimmed and semi-skimmed milk sales rose sharply last year as people became more conscious about health and diet ,according to Dairy Council figures published yesterday.

Sales of semi-skimmed milk increased 186 per cent. in the year and account for four per cent. of all sales. Full skimmed milk sales were up 135 per cent. and represent five per cent. of total consumption.

The proportion of households buying low-fat milks has more than doubled, from 13 to 26 per cent. with skimmed milk increasing from 10 to 19 per cent., and semi-skimmed milk from five to 14 per cent. Milk is still bought by 99 per cent. of all households, and the average weekly purchase is 9·9 pints.

WAR VETERANS RE-UNITED

Two navy veterans who were seperated after a bomb attack on their ship in the Mediterranean during the 193945 War have discovered that they have been living 20 yards apart in Spalding, Lincs., for almost 20 years.

The reunion came during a chance meeting in a public house at Spalding, between Mr Nicholas Myers and Mr Alec McNeill, both 68. When the war broke out, both joined the 10,000-ton cruiser Liverpool. But they were given different postings after Italian aircraft damaged the ship in 1940.

KENSINGTON RAIL STATION PLAN

Studies are at an advanced stage for London to get a major new railway station at Kensington to handle through trains from Glasgow, Manchester and Birmingham to Brighton and Dover.

It would use the line now in very restricted service between Willesden Junction on London Midland Region and Clapham Junction on Southern Region. There is a link into Western Region near Wormwood Scrubs. The line is now used mainly by freight trains.

TORY COUNCIL'S 7.7pc RATE RISE

A rate rise of 7·7 per cent. was proposed by Tory-controlled Gloucestershire County Council yesterday. The new rate will be 152·4p in the pound compared with this year's figure of 141·48p.

Mr Henry Elwes, the council chairman, said the increase was almost entirely caused by the Government's £6,700,000 cut in grants to the authority.

150 NEW JOBS

Expansion at Pentos Home and Office Products, Asher Lane, Ripley, Derbyshire, will create up to 150 jobs. The furniture firm has already taken on 120 workers in 15 months.

Brittan is backing community radio

By ROBIN STRINGER TV and Radio Correspondent

EXPERIMENTAL community radio stations could be in operation before the end of the year following yesterday's announcement by Mr Brittan, Home Secretary, that the Government wanted community radio to develop as quickly as possible.

An internal Home Office study is expected to report "in a matter of weeks rather than months" on how the new stations could be set up, whereupon Mr Brittan will make a further statement.

Speaking in the Commons yesterday, he said: "I believe that community radio is a constructive development which should now be given a clear impetus. Community radio will promote self-help, increase freedom of speech and be of value to many local communities."

Its arrival had been made possible by decisions approved towards the end of last year at the Geneva international conference on the planning of the V H F waveband.

The waveband was being extended to range from 88 to 108 MHz and emergency services were being cleared off it to accommodate the new services including B B C Radio 1 and an independent national radio channel.

Close involvement

Mr Brittan said community radio could involve a low-power transmitter broadcasting to the immediate neighbourhood with the close involvement of a community, or a station broadcasting to a wider area involving an ethnic minority or enthusiasts for a particular kind of music.

Decisions would have to be made about how to choose between competing applicants, how the stations would be financed and what limits, if any should be placed on what could be broadcast and what the relationship should be with existing local radio stations.

Mr Brittan accepted that community radio was seen as representing a third tier of radio quite distinct from services provided by the B B C and the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

He repeated Government assertions that there was no question of legitimising pirate radio stations which continue to thrive all over the country.

Red tape gags 'Dog Collar'

By CHARLES LAWRENCE

IT was over and out for a Citizens' Band (C B)-using vicar yesterday when he was told that his hymns and sermons sent over the airwaves were against the law.

The Rev Geraint Hughes—C B handle "Dog Collar"—the vicar of Llandrindod Wells, Poyws, was told that his broadcasts of services to parishioners too old or il lto come to church were breaking the terms of his C B licence.

Not only does the C B licence exclude singing on the air, on the basis that broadcasting songs amounts to operating a pirate radio station, but it also bans speaking to more than one person at a time.

"Dog Collar" was both singing hymns into his microphone and broadcasting to five housebound parishioners at the same time.

A spokesman for the Department of Trade, which enforces the C B licences, said: "The vicar is technically in breach of his licence, which prohibits broadcasting music and specifies that C B is for person-to-person comunication only."

Mr Hughes now plans to abandon the airwaves and instead make tape recordings of his services to be delivered by hand around the parish.

NO FAST RULES FOR CATHOLICS

By Our Churches Correspondent

GOING without alcohol, cigarettes or meat are among wide-ranging options put forward by the Roman Catholic bishops of England and Wales for observing Frida ypenance.

The list is spelled out in a statement from the bishops, who have decided abstinence can suit "individual circumstances."

The bishops stressed that Roman Catholics are "obliged" to set aside Friday, the day of Christ's Crucifixion, as a time of self-denial, but their form of penance is a matter of "personal choice."

The alternatives for Friday penance, to be observed after Ash Wednesday, ar:

Abstaining from meat or some other food.

Abstainin gfro malcohol, smoking or some other form of amusement.

Making the special effort involved in family prayer, taking part in the Mass, visiting the Blessed Sacrament or praying the Stations of the Cross.

Fasting for a longer period than usual and giving what is saved to the needy.

Helping somebody poor, sick, old or lonely.

Student conman takes ILEA for £13,000 ride

By MARGOT NORMAN Education Staff

THE Inner London Education Authority has asked the police to prosecute a student conman who they believe has fraudently obtained £17,500 in grants from the I L E A and a Scottish authority over the last four years.

The student, understood to be a Scot in his late thirties, appears to have wheedled more than £13,000 out of the I L E A for courses at London University's Queen Elizabeth Colleeg and all six London polytechnics.

He may also have had £4,500 from the Scottish authorities for courses at Paisley College and Strathclyde University.

Bank tip-off

His preference was for courses in economics or sociology and, although in several cases he seems just to have turned up only to register and attend a few lectures, he did some studying and even passed examinations.

The fraud came to light when a branch of Barclays Bank warned the I L E A's grants office that the student was also receiving grant money from Scotland.

Grants officers then spent months combing their application lists—they process some 30,000 grant inquiries a year and award grants to about half—before concluding that a man using several names and addresses had taken them for an expensive ride.

Careful checks

Before the police could be called in the move had to be sanctioned by the I L E A Further and Higher Education Committee, who met yesterday and decided to hand the grants officers' dossier over to the police.

Mrs Edna Mathieson, chairman of the awards section of the committee, said yesterday: "We are astonished that this student has slipped through our very careful checking procedures."

But an I L E A spokesman explained that, at present, grant applications are simply listed alphabetically by the computer and somebody trying to claim more than one grant might only be rumbled if they applied twice under the same name. The authority's officers are now working on a tighter system of computer cross-referencing.

BISHOP TO RETIRE

The Rt Rev. Stuart Snell, Bishop of Croydon for the past seven years, it retiring early due to ill health. Mr Snell, 64, has been suffering from heart trouble.

OXFORD PROFESSOR AT 27

OXFORD has appointed its youngest professor aged 27. He is Dr Simon Donaldson, a mathematician.

He takes up his post as Wallis Professor of Mathematics on Sept. 1, eleven days after his 28th birthday.

His predecessor, Prof. Sir John Kingman, currently Director of the Science and Engineering Research Council and Vice-Chancellor Elect, Bristol University, was appointed at the age of 30 after holding a Chair at Sussex at the age of 26.

But Dr Donaldson, as far as records can reveal, is the youngest Oxford professor, although Isaac Newton was a Cambridge professor at 26.

Dr Donaldson, who is single, won a First in Mathematics at Pembroke College, Cambridge, and went on to a seven-year research fellowship at All Souls, Oxford, but he has had some experience of academic failure.

He just missed a scholarship place at Sevenoaks School in 1969, where he became a long-serving captain of sailing—still his favourite pastime. His other interests include literature and classical music.

UNSOLVED CASE OF SCIENTIST KILLED ABROAD

An unlawful killing verdict was recorded yesterday at an Oxford inquest on Mr Alan Williams, 61, a scientist found stabbed to death in his room at the Hilton Hotel in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, on July 17, 1985, while on a business trip.

Mr Williams, a research consultant for Esso, who lived in Chapel Lane, Sutton Courtenay, Oxfordshire, was stabbed 13 times, apparently during a struggle, said Dr Richard Cowdell, a pathologist.

Dr Nicholas Gardiner, Oxfordshire Coroner, read a report from Kuala Lumpur police that Mr Williams was seen with a Chinese woman in the hotel disco shortly before his death. He said: "I have heard from the British Commission that investigations into this matter are by no means finished."

THE industrial sections of London stock markets suffered a fairly sizeable setback yesterday as a disappointing overnight performance on Wall Street and renewed confusion about crude oil prices put a sharp brake on buying activity.

The session was mainly dominated by the activities of short-term holders who decided that discretion was the better part of valour and rushed to take profits. However, leading jobbers reported that there was little sign of major selling pressure and it was noticeable that they were bidding for certain stocks, presumably to cover bear positions.

The market undertone was better than that indicated by the main indices; the "30" index finished 20·8 down at 1003·7, after 1002·8, while the "100" index closed 22 lower at 1283·7, after the day's low of 1280·3.

These reactions were considered to be quite insignificant in terms of the recent strong advance and many observers took the view that the day's performance was merely a natural corrective movement in a "frothy" bull market. Investors were unwilling to extend their commitments in what could be a sensitive situation allied to Friday's close of the trading account, but seemed content to stay with their good-class holdings.

Electrical and electronic issues were under a cloud in sympathy with weakness in Racal Electronics which tumbled 48 to 240p as the interim report warned on second-half profits. C A S E were sold down to 267p, but rallied well to close 6 easier at 287p, but Plessey reacted 12 to 190p and Thorn E M I 15 to 442p, after 439p.

Expectations of heavy profit-taking in Imperial Chemical Industries proved awry. Following the recent jump, culminating in Tuesday's advance of 39p, I C I shares were lowered to 805p at the opening of the market, but then recovered to close a relatively insignificant 7 easier at 816p. British Telecom slipped to 128p before closing 2½ off at 130p.

With sterling taking a turn for the worse, partly on the stalemate in the miners' strike situation, Government securities had a drab session, but dullness in the traditional market was relieved by further strength in the index-linked issues. Long-dated stocks showed falls extending to £¾ on the printed lists, but index-linked Treasury 2 p.c., 2006, closed £1¼ higher at £102½.

Leading bank shares were quietly dull, with falls of 6 in Barclays, at 603p, and Midland, at 548p. Elsewhere in financials, Mercantile House ran into profit-taking after Tuesday's advance on the interim report and reacted 26 to 355p. First National Finance Corporation were easier at 82p in normal market hours, but rallied to 83½p in late dealings after publication of the results.

Following Tuesday's jump of 40 on American buying, Blue Circle Industries dropped to 500p before closing 10 down at 510p. Redland were also reactionary at 284p, but other builders had firm spots in Aberdeen Construction, at 200p, and Turriff, at 330p.

Some of the blue chips showed modest recovery from the worst, but the final tone was still nervous and sensitive. Dealers reported a good overall performance in the takeover favourite, Lucas Industries, which recovered from early weakness at 262p to close 2 firmer at 275p; buyers, it seemed, were still hopeful about a possible transatlantic bid.

News of the consortium stake left Milford Docks 11 higher at 72p, while hopes of a bid from Suter left F H Lloyd 3½ up at 49p. Booker McConnell were 7 better at 256p, after 260p, on the Monopolies Commission's clearance for the Dee Corporation bid, a decision which caused some surprise in the market. Dee Corporation shares ended a shade easier at 207p, after 202p.

There was some sizeable selling of Hanson Trust, which reacted to 333p before closing 10 down at 337p. Similar falls were showing in Beecham Group, at 380p, B O C Group, at 295p, and B A T Industries, at 356p, while Jaguar closed 5 down at 304p, after 301p. B T R dipped to 657p before ending 13 lower at 661p, while Dunlop were ½ easier at 33½p, after 32½p.

British Aerospace were lowered to 368p at the outset, but buyers soon appeared on the scene and the shares closed unchanged at 376p. There was a late speculative flurry in L C P Holdings in the wake of revived takeover speculation and the price ended 7 up at 122p. Speculative interest was also reported in Halma, 8 better at 233p.

Other firm spots included Church & Co, 10 up at 490p, A Kershaw, 20 higher at 550p, Ransome Sims & Jeffries, 6 better at 438p, and United Wire, 5 up at 123p, the last-named on the full report.

Company results and interim report brought gains in Bootham Engineers, at 140p, Plastic Constructions, at 62p, after 65p, and Stewart Plastics, at 93p.

T A C E were vulnerable to profit-taking after the recent sharp advance on the good figures and the shares reacted 25 to 395p. Others on offer included Pentland Industries, 20 down at 370p, B I C C, 10 off at 260p, and Ferranti, 12 lower at 152p. T I Group, at 240p, and G K N, at 209p, both lost 8.

Bid speculators rushed to take profits in Fleet Holdings and the shares reacted to 256p, but an impressive rally ensued, hence a final price of 265p, only 2 easier. Associated Newspapers were 10 down at 710p, after 705p, Bowater Industries 6 off at 244p, after 241p, and Reed International, 12 lower at 580p.

Small sellers predominated in store shares where Great Universal A ended 14 down at 720p and Woolworth 7 lower at 618p, after 615p. Etam were looking easier at 142p on whispers that Ward White was about to dispose of its stake in the company, but attempted buying in a thin market left Liberty 50 higher at 450p.

The quotations were restored for Hong Kong Land, 2½ better at 52½p, and Hutchison Whampoa, 12 higher at 228p.

Oil jobbers were very much on the defensive at the opening against the background of talk about crude oil price cuts, but the market subsequently became calmer and final prices were off the bottom.

British Petroleum ended 5 off at 503p, after 491p. Britoil 7 lower at 208p, after 205p, "Shell" 5 easier at 708p, after 691p, and Lasmo 10 down at 348p, after 345p.

Gold shares lost ground in sympathy with bullion, which ended $4·75 down at $301.

Tailpiece

LAST August, we suggested it could be worth taking an interest in the unlisted securities market newcomer Industrial Finance & Investment at 98p. The subsequent results exceeded best market expectations — pre-tax profits came out of £752,000, against £359,000 and the dividend total was 3p, compared with 2·25p.

The shares have made strong progress and now stand at 161p, hence a reader's question: "Is it time to take profits?" This is not easy to answer, since this acquisition-minded group is judged likely to enjoy further profit growth.

On basic investment statistics—the yield is a meagre 2·8 p.c. and the price-earnings ratio 10—there is perhaps a case for taking some profits, but we feel that, on a medium-term view, it could be sensible to retain a stake in this expanding business, which will probably go for a full quotation in the future.

P&O option to Sterling

IN VIEW of the sharp rise in P&O shares since the terms for Sterling Guarantee Trust were first announced, P&O is making an alternative offer to SGT warrantholders who were originally offered 20p per warrant.

Warrantholders may now opt for five new P&O warrants for every 1 SGT warrants held. Each new P&O warrant will entitle holders to buy one P&O share at 193p each July up until 1990. P&O are currently 405p.

Australian stockbrokers T. C. Coombs will stand in the market for 320,00 SGT warrants, offering 30p each.

Formal offer documents for SGT are expected at the end of next week. P&O shareholders will also receive details of the chance for them to buy SGT's former 30 p.c. P&O stake at 300p a share. It is thought that offer will remain open until Feb. 22.

Anglia TV jumps

ANGLIA Television Group's full year profits to Oct. 31 have expanded from £2·68m before tax to £4·3m, despite a £1·4m turnround into losses by the associates.

The final dividend is to be raised from 4·5p net to 5p, payable on May 22, to lift the total from 7p to 8p.

Nell buoyant

HADTOOL manufacturer James Nell Holdings' 1984 second half profits will "undoubtedly prove a solid improvement on the first." There is still room for further reorganisation and cost savings, the company adds.

Gold lower

THE RENEWED strength of the dollar and continuing uncertainty over oil prices yesterday undermined confidence in the London bullion market.

Gold, down to $300·25 an ounce at the afternoon fixing, closed at $301, a fall of $4·75. Dealers described turnover as moderate in very nervous conditions.

Volvo revs up

CAR-MAKER Volvo, Sweden's largest company, announced a 6 p.c. jump in 1984 profits to SKr7bn ($770m). It also plans a merger of its construction equipment arm with Clark Equipment of the United States to form the world's third largest company of its kind.

Volvo has asked Bank of America to arrange a $380m standby credit line.

Fiat progress

FIAT, Italy's biggest private industrial group, increased operating profits by over 26 p.c. last year to 1·6bn lire (£727m) on sales up 5 p.c. to 23·2bn lire (£9·5bn). Sales of Fiat Auto, the car subsidiary were up 9·5 p.c. to 14·5bn lire (£5·6bn).

Giovanni Agnelli, chairman, says the group is "healthy again."

Fiat claims European market leadership in cars and farm machinery and is in second place in the commercial vehicle and construction equipment sectors.

Simon spends $10m

SIMON Engineering has bought for $10m (£6·9m) cash just over 50 p.c. of Geo-search Corporation of Texas, a seismic exploration company and has an option to buy the rest of the shares over the next five years. Simon has been looking for an acquisition in American oil services for three years and might make further purchases.

The price is being raised by a London placing of 5·7m shares. Geosearch has been profitable every year since its founding in 1973 and in 1983 it made $1·4m pre-tax. The assets were valued at $11·2m at end-1983.

Carbide pays same

UNION CARBIDE Corporation is paying a same-again dividend of 35 cents for the quarter to March 1, despite threats of huge personal injury claims resulting from the gas leak at Bhopal in India.

Apple peel

APPLE COMPUTER has intensified the price-cutting battle in the computer market by cutting the American prices of its Macintosh and Lisa microcomputers. The bottom end of the range is to be $2,195 (£1,951) in the United States, though that machine is £2,984 in Britain.

Racal shares dive 48p after profits warning

By TOM KYTE

DISAPPOINTMENT at Racal Electronics Interim statement yesterday wiped £274 million (16·7 p.c.) off the group's stock market capitalisation to £1·37 billion.

Pre-tax profits for the half-year to October 12 were way below expectations at £47 million against £48·7 million but the real upset centred on a warning that the United States subsidiary Racal-Vadic would see full year profits "considerably less than half that for the previous year."

This knocked at least £15 million off most market estimates of full year profits, bringing them down to around £130 million pre-tax, against an actual £119 million for the year to March 1984, and Racal's shares dived 48p by the close to finish at 240p.

Racal-Vadic enjoyed an exceptionally strong trading period in 1983-84 but in the current year has met with delays in new product development and a general weakening in demand for a new range of modems for the personal computer market.

Eager to switch attention towards the company's stronger features, chairman Sir Ernest Harrison pointed out that Racal's other United States subsidiary Racal-Milgo is performing strongly. Once a problem area for the group, Racal-Milgo is set for its best year ever and the order intake is at a record level.

Sir Ernest was also keen to emphasise the potential of the company's cellular radio operations. These come under the Racal-Vodaphone subsidiary which declared development costs for the half-year of £5·4 million compared with £549,000 last year.

Total costs of this division in the year to March 1985 are estimated at £12 million. But Sir Ernest says Vodaphone should bring these down to £8 million by the end of next year with a final quarter breakeven.

Sir Ernest added: "From there on cellular radio should move into profits. We are looking for £5 million of trading profits from there in 1986-87, perhaps £20 million in 1987-88 and around £37 million by 1988-89—and that includes nothing from the value added servicing side."

Racal-Vodaphone has already installed 700 cellular radio sets and estimates that it will have around 1,000 installed by the end of the month.

Sir Ernest said that by 1990 he expected the company to have around 50 p.c. of the available United Kingdom market with 250,000 subscribers. That seems to tie with the announcement yesterday from Cellnet, the joint venture between British Telecom and Securicor, which provides Vodaphone with its only real competition.

Like Vodaphone, Cellnet said it would have around 1,000 customers by the end of the month and expected to have at least 250,000 subscribers by the end of 1989. But contrary to Racal's statement, Cellnet claims that it currently has 70 p.c. of the United Kingdom cellular radio market.

Racal's latest major acquisition Chubb, acquired in October for £170 million, has not yet made any impact on the group's figures but Sir Ernest said "the integration is continuing and we are currently reviewing the operations and accounting policies of Chubb. When this is completed we will be able to make a statement on the profit contribution that can be expected."

Racal's interim dividend is to be raised from 0·73p net to 0·77p, payable Feb. 25.

Sterling buffeted by oil price confusion

By ROLAND GRIBBEN

STERLING was the loser yesterday from confusion in oil trading caused by conflicting reports that the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries will cut prices by amounts ranging up to $2·50 a barrel in Geneva next week.

The pound was left relatively unprotected in the foreign exchange markets in contrast to Tuesday's concerted central banks' action and North Sea oil prices registered drops of 45 cents a barrel.

Sterling dropped to $1·1095 at one stage in thin and highly nervous trading before finishing at $1·1125, a drop of 1·18 cents but its trade-weighted average against the basket of international currencies ended at a record low of 70·7.

The confusion started after Arab and English language newspapers in Saudi Arabia quoted authoritative sources as saying that a meeting of experts had agreed to recommend a $2·50 a barrel cut in Opec's $29 reference price at next week's summit meeting of oil ministers.

Prices slumped in spot markets although traders dismissed the price cut as impossible. They felt the confusion had developed from reports that the experts would recommend a narrowing of the $2·50 a barrel differences between Opec heavy and light oil prices.

There were two other conflicting interpretations of the experts' meeting — that they had recommended a reduction of $1 a barrel to $28 in the official Opec price and that they favoured a $1·50 a barrel narrowing of the $4 differential between extra light African crudes and the cheaper heavy varieties produced in the Gulf.

In between Fadhil al-Chalabi, Opec's deputy general secretary who was at the experts' meeting in Riyadh, described the price cut reports as totally untrue and said there had been no discussions about the basic price. Talks had centred on the differences between the extra light African grades and the heavy Gulf crudes.

But with traders arguing that Opec would still have to make price cuts and drawing on comments by Nigeria's minister that the $29 a barrel benchmark had lost its symbolism North Sea crudes caught the backlash in spot market trading.

Brent oil for delivery next month dropped 35 cents to $26·65 a barrel and deals were done at $25·80 a barrel for March shipments, a discount of $2·85 on the official price of $28·65.

Trading also reflected further falls in futures prices in the United States while the Opec fitters knocked $8 a tonne off gas oil products.

FNFC profits jump to £17m

By ANNE SEGALL

FIRST National Finance Corporation, the consumer finance company which has long been regarded as a prime takeover target, yesterday held out the prospect of a return to dividend payments for the first time in more than ten years.

The news pleased the City which believes that the resumption of dividends will attract those major investors, like pension funds, which have held aloof for many years.

On a bad day for the rest of the market, FNFC shares closed ½p lower at 85½p.

In a very cautious statement, FNFC made it clear that no dividend will be payable for the year to October 1984, in spite of a big jump from £11·4 million to £17·6 million in profits both before and after tax. Earnings per share rose from 9·8p to 14·2p.

First National effectively pays no tax because of huge tax losses, put at about £90 million, dating back to the days when it had to be rescued by a consortium of major high street banks.

At one stage, the company had a deficiency on shareholder's funds of £70 million and its bank rescuers stipulated that no dividend could be paid until group capital and reserves had been rebuilt to £34·4 million.

Now First National says it is just £229,000 away from that figure.

Abbey urges wider powers

By RICHARD NORTHEDGE

ABBEY NATIONAL Building Society is asking the Government to widen even further the wider powers planned for societies in legislation which is expected to be put before Parliament this autumn.

The proposals, outlined in a Green Paper published last July, would allow most societies to expand into non-traditional areas such as banking, legal conveyancing and overdrafts. But the Abbey claims that for large societies, the proposals do not go far enough.

The £17 billion society, Britain's second largest, wants to double to 20 p.c. the proportion of assets which could be used for non-housing loans or second mortgages. It is also suggesting doubling the £5,000 per customer limit proposed for unsecured personal loans, and wants to double the £50 limit planned for personal cheques.

The Abbey's submission to the Government also seeks greater freedom to offer a broad range of personal financial services and insurance broking, easier merger procedures, more freedom to use the wholesale money markets, and the chance to expand into Europe.

There is also opposition to the Government's plan to make societies finance the extra supervision by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies.

Abbey chairman Sir Campbell Adamson said yesterday: "A more liberal approach is needed which does not shackle the leading societies."

It has already had discussions with the Chief Registrar, and expects to have talks with Government officials shortly. A statement from the Government is expected soon, after the Budget detailing the form of the new legislation.

Abbey's chief executive, Peter Birch, stated: "We know the Government has listened to us and has further proposals."

The Green Paper suggested that all societies would continue to put 90 p.c. of their assets into conventional housing loans, but that up 10 p.c. could be used for other secured lending.

Societies with reserves of over £5 million would be allowed to put half that 10 p.c. into personal loans, property development or money transmission banking services.

While asking for these proportions to be increased, the Abbey has not suggested a new reserves level to prevent smaller societies over-extending themselves. The Government could choose to restrict powers requested by the Abbey to a new band of very large societies.

Abbey's reserves at the start of this year were £618 million.

THE STOCK market may have fallen out of bed yesterday, with the "30" index down 20·8 points to 1003·7, but it is still healthy enough to put on a further 50 points or so in the short term, say leading chartists poring over their share trend lines and their point and figure charts. The bad news is that in the medium term they can see that a sharp reaction could set in.

Stand back from the day-to-day movements of the "30" index and it is clear we have enjoyed a virtually unbroken bull market since 1975. The trouble is the rise has been getting faster and faster. The market may boil over, fears Bronwen Wood of Rowe & Pitman. "It could blow off like the lid of a kettle."

She lays stress on a ten-point reversal chart — a graph of the index which is relatively insensitive to market movements since it takes a ten-point shift to register on the graph. That way despite the steep rise in the last ten years the market had moved within a recognisable trend channel.

But it accelerated out of the trend in July which makes prices now very vulnerable to a sharp reaction. Even a fall as far as 840 would take the index only back to the bottom of the channel, says Miss Wood, and therefore consistent with the continuing long-term bull market.

Robin Griffiths of Grieveson Grant also thinks the market could be heading for a sharp reaction after a further short rise. "The trend line still points upwards towards 1,100. It is too soon to say for certain the top has been reached but I am nervous." He adds: "If Wall Street cracks it could break London and other centres.

"It feels more like early 1972 than ever before, the last good market before a strong bear market," he declared. "You can see the market latching on to just a few good stocks."

The trend towards greater selectivity of stocks is also pointed out by John Cunningham of Cambridge-based Investment Research. But he warns investors not be too alarmed. "The market is a little overbought," he says, "but there is no technical evidence that the main clear upward trend has been broken. Call me a nervous bull."

David Fuller of Chart Analysis says the performance of the dollar and sterling could provide the key to stock market performance. "We have just gone through the great 1,000 milestone. It is a 'phobia point' when people reassess their positions."

He believes a moderate correction to shares would be a healthy sign. "But watch the dollar. If it resumes its advance, interest rates may overreact, gilts would be vulnerable and the stock market could lose its nerve leading to a big shake-out," argues Mr Fuller.

CITY COMMENT

Chartists air hopes and fears on the market

Unit trust mobility

WHEN the stock market rises, it takes unit trust sales with it. Some small investors have an uncanny knack of identifying the top of the market and getting in just when others are taking their profits. Figures from the Unit Trust Association yesterday suggest that 1984 may have been no exception: sales last year rose 19 p.c. to a record £2·92 billion.

Yet investors seem to be a little more professional. Re-sales of units by the public shot up 50 p.c. to £1·48 billion, which leaves the net sales of £1·44 billion slightly lower than 1983's peak — though that figure itself was nearly two and a half times the previous best.

Record sales and repurchases suggest that investors are becoming more sophisticated, and switching more often between funds. They have a greater choice. Member companies of the Unit Trust Association launched 93 more funds last year, taking the total to 687, and non-members' trusts take the aggregate higher still. This is for the good, even if the number of individual unitholdings at 2·2 million (including massive duplication) remains low.

As for unit trust managers' skills the record shows that the median United Kingdom funds managed an increase of about 26 p.c. last year, including reinvested income: the FT 30 share index showed a 25 p.c. gain after dividends of more than 3 p.c.

CBI Budget proposals

THE Confederation of British Industry has mixed populist appeal with special pleading in Budget representations officially published yesterday but discussed with the Chancellor well before he went into uncomfortable purdah.

The employers' organisation wants tax cuts worth £2 billion this year and £3·25 billion in a full year with a 10 p.c. increase above the rate of inflation in personal allowances taking the lion's share.

The CBI is on well trodden ground in arguing that the increase in allowances will improve the incentive to work by widening the gap between earnings and unemployment pay and easing the poverty trap for the lower paid.

Despite the uncertainties surrounding this year's Budget arithmetic the CBI believes the Chancellor will be easily able to conjure up the £1·5 billion it will take for the personal tax changes.

But the Chancellor has been predictably less receptive to the CBI's arguments for restructuring the rundown in capital allowances and a public works cum infrastructure programme.

The way the allowance changes are being reduced from 100 p.c. to 25 p.c. has, the CBI maintains, produced the risk of a slowdown in the investment recovery in 1986-87. It feels companies will be faced with the choice of an investment cut or worsening cash position and wants to see the 'dip' in allowances smoothed out with a 50 p.c. transitional phase in 1985-87 at a cost building up to £900 million a year.

Dee gets go-ahead on Booker bid

DEE CORPORATION has been given the all-clear by the Monopolies Commission to renew its takeover bid for Booker McConnell because it would not operate against the public interest.

The long awaited report from the commission says that in food retailing the bid would have no appreciable effect on the market. If anything, it would enable Dee to become a stronger competitor to the largest multiple retailers.

In food wholesaling, the merger would restrict local competition in only a few cases. Dee would have a strong commercial incentive not to add to the difficulties already faced by its most important customers. A minority note of dissent from one commission member B. C. Owens says the merger could operate against the public interest.

Booker shares added 8p to 256p on the news yesterday. Booker said it had "noted" the report and envisaged an exciting and successful future as an independent company. Dee said it was "studying" the report.

Bank of Scotland offers home banking service

BANK OF SCOTLAND yesterday became the first major clearing bank to offer customers a home banking service in a move which points to growing competition in the banking market.

The new service, aimed at private individuals and small companies, is being launched through Prestel, the telephone-based viewdata system.

An initial investment of £95 is required in a Prestel adaptor before customers can key into Bank of Scotland's computer. Thereafter, all that is needed is a telephone and television set.

Bavid Dunlop, Bank of Scotland assistant general manager, said the aim was to provide customers with "a comprehensive range of services" which they could use at almost any time of the day or night.

He described the Bank of Scotland home banking scheme as "simple to operate."

Features of the scheme include the ability to give payment instructions in advance and to change standing order payments.

In addition, home banking customers will be able to transfer money into and out of a special high interest account available only to them. Interest payable is between 9 p.c. and 11 p.c., depending on the amount invested.

Charges for home banking will be a flat £2·50 a quarter from Bank of Scotland plus £5 a quarter for becoming a Prestel subscriber.

In addition, customers will have to pay standard telephone and Prestel charges

U.S. inflation control spurs Wall Street

By JAMES SRODES in Washington

WALL STREET'S rally continued yesterday, after a White House declaration of victory over inflation.

Analysts also were buoyed by hints from James Baker, President Reagan's nominee to be Treasury Secretary, that he would consider a more active intervention role to help bring the dollar down to more competitive levels with sterling and other major currencies.

The best news, however, was on inflation. The government's index of consumer prices rose a scant 0·2 p.c. during December. That means that retail price inflation in America rose 4 p.c. during the 12 months of 1984 and is expanding at 3·7 p.c. annually.

The December figure would have been lower except for a sudden rise in citrus prices caused by cold winter weather in Florida.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said inflation "remains low and is under control."

The inflation data, he added, "gives the country the best three-year inflation record since 1966 through 1968." During 1981, the index had expanded at a better than 13·5 p.c. annual rate.

Federal Reserve Board chairman Paul Volcker has begun a series of private briefings which criticise so-called supply-side economists for urging a more expansionary money supply growth policy now that inflation appears in check.

Sources close to the Fed have briefed journalists and business economists over the past fortnight with arguments that current policies will remain in place until there is a marked improvement in productivity levels in manufacturing.

As a result share prices continued to bound upward in heavy trading for the third straight trading day.

The Dow Jones Industrial Index of 30 blue chips closed 15·23 higher at 1274·75.

● Sterling in New York closed at $1·1120 against $1·1248 on Tuesday.

RTZ in £10m Cornish growth

RIO TINTO-Zinc's Cornish tin-mining operation, via Carnon Consolidated, plans an investment programme of £10 million over the next two to three years, Carnon's managing director Brian Calver said yesterday, writes COLIN CAMPBELL.

Production rates for 1985 are being raised, and the group's various mines expanded as additional reserves are proved and shafts are modernised.

RTZ believes its tin mines, which employ 1,070, have a life well into the 1990s and says they remain viable at a tin price of £7,500-£8,000 a tonne (LME Cash tin closed at £9,755 a tonne last night).

RTZ first moved into Cornish tin mining in 1979 buying Wheal Jane from Consolidated Gold Fields. In 1982 the group acquired a 40 p.c. stake in South Crofty, previously controlled by the St Piran Group, and in 1984 bought out Charter Consilidated's 60 p.c. stake to make Crofty wholly owned.

RTZ no waccounts for 80 p.c. of total Cornish tin mining production. In addition the RTZ Group holds various mining rights in Cornwall and a 19·4 p.c. stake in Geevor Tin Mines, a member of the Gencor Group.

Pre-tax profits of Carnon Consolidated for 1983 was £699,000. Results from 1984 are likely to be higher.

High Court judge bans Caplan and Pepler

A HIGH COURT judge has imposed lengthy periods of disqualification from holding company office on two of the men who ran "company liquidation" specialists Chancery Lane Registrars.

The hearing arose from a petition lodged by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in September 1983, which was for the winding-up of Chancery Lane and the takeover of nearly 200 company liquidations then being handled by Maurice Caplan, Stephen Pepler and Nicholas Wright.

But the case was delayed by Chancery Lane which claimed that it was going to oppose the petition. In the event, the hearing lasted just two days.

The appointment of Official Receiver, who has been acting as provisional liquidator and special manager for Chancery Lane and its client companies since 1983, was confirmed by the court.

Mr Caplan and Mr Pepler were also disqualified for 12 years each from "acting directly or indirectly as a director, liquidator, receiver or receiver manager of a limited company."

Creditors' meetings for the 181 client companies involved will be held shortly.

The case aroused wide interest because of the record of those running Chancery Lane — Mr Caplan and Mr Pepler both have fraud convictions and Mr Caplan was a bankrupt for 10 years — and because the new insolvency legislation, which is just about to begin its committee stage in Parliament, would offer more comprehensive control over such cases.

Under new legislation liquidators and officials need recognised professional qualifications to gain a DTI licence and the penalty for acting in such a capacity while not qualified could include up to two years' imprisonment and an unlimited fine on indictment.

COMPANIES

Saville Gordon tops £1m

J. SAVILLE GORDON, whose interests range from scrap processing to property, has had its best-ever opening half with pre-tax profits more than doubling from £504,000 past the previous best of £525,000 to £1·025m.

There was a marked improvement in all three divisions and with the pre-interest contribution from two — metal trading and processing and property — up by over £500,000.

Moreover, subject to the usual reservations, chairman John Saville is confident of being able to maintain the performance in the second half. In 1983-84 it went on to £1·55m.

The interim is being increased from 1·1p to 1·4p on April 10, to reduce disparity. Earnings were 5·5p (5·1p).

Bootham Engineers

BOOTHAM Engineers is fully restoring last year's dividend cut with a 6p (2p) payment. A marked upturn in the level of demand for the groups services is adequately reflected in pre-tax profits up from just £25,200 to £551,000 for the year to Oct. 31.

All the engineering divisions traded profitably with the York motor retailing subsidiary, Foxton's Garage, having another successful year.

Increased confidence about the future has enabled the group to embark on a selective capital investment programme in order to maintain competitiveness.

Lookers

GROWTH at Lookers, the car, truck and agricultural machinery dealer, slowed considerably in the closing months, but the group continued to make progress in highly competitive markets.

Pre-tax profits for the year ending September are up from £1·41m to £1·87m and earnings from 14·8p to 16·9p.

A 5p final dividend on April 30 lifts the total payout from an adjusted 3·87p to 4·5p.

The motor business sold an increased volume of vehicles, contract hire and leasing results were another record and good results were produced by coach-building. Agricultural business, too, performed well.

Park Food

SEASONAL half-year losses at Park Food Group are up from £1·41m to £1·64m pre-tax, but profits for the full-year are expected to exceed the previous year's £1·57m.

Christmas 1984 season, says the board, was a successful one with a further increase in the number of hampers packed and delivered.

Recent acquisitions have integrated successfully with other activities, it adds.

The interim dividend is going up from 1p to 1·2p on March 4.

Plastic Constructions

PLASTIC Constructions is set to more than double its profits with its conditional agreement to buy Industriplas, a distributor of semi-finished industrial plastics, for a maximum total of £1,045,000. This is being satisfied by the issue of 900,000 Plastic Constructions Ordinary — 16 p.c. of the enlarged group — and a maximum of £550,000 cash.

Industriplas made £212,000 pre-tax on sales of £5·22m in the year ended September and Plastic Constructions has weighed in with £277,500 (£248,600) on turnover of £12·4m for the same period.

A 1·3305p final, for which the new shares will not rank, is payable April 1 and makes 2·6665p (2·38p) from earnings of 4·85p (4·92p).

Somportex

CONFECTIONERY and iced-drinks distributor Somportex Holdings forecasts a loss for the year to April 30 next as a whole, though it does not anticipate this will be as large as 1982-83's £396,000 deficit.

The group, which ended last year with profits of £104,000, has turned in first half pre-tax profits of £196,000 against £468,000.

The disappointing result, it says, is due in particular to "Slush Puppie" sales being below expectation. The impact on cashflow of the loss forecast, however, will be substantially mitigated by the level of depreciation.

As usual, there is no interim.

Stewart Plastics

STEWART PLASTICS is again paying its shareholders more with the interim dividend going up from 0·7915p to 0·88p on March 15 from earnings of 4·2p (3·4p). Turnover has increased from £4·75m to £5·46m following the introduction of several successful new products as well as the expansion of the group's business with a number of major multiple retailers.

Operating profits were £52,000 up at £1·55m and the pre-tax out-turn is on from £1·61m, which included £62,900 unrealised capital gain, to £1·69m.

IN BRIEF

Estates Property Investment Co.: First half pre-tax income £1·44m (£1·26m). Net rents receivable £2·297m (£1·98m). Eps 4·85p (4·31p). Interim dividend again 2·75p, payable April 3.

A. J. Gelfer: First half pre-tax profit £408,000 (£409,000). Turnover £2·75m (£2·8m). Eps 3·8p (3·48p), payable April 15.

Caledonian Associated Cinemas: First half pre-tax profit £515,000 (£544,000). Turnover £3·3m (£5·38m). 1983 results included subsidiary Elena Mae, subsequently sold. Eps 63·5p (65·7p). Interim dividend again 2p, payable Feb. 15. Have bought City Hotel, Elgin; Grangemouth retail development completed.

Ingersoll-Rand Company: Full-year pre-tax profit $98,000 (loss $180,000). Net sales $2·48m ($2·27m). Eps $2·7 (loss $5·94). No dividend (same).

Continental and Industrial Trust: First half pre-tax revenue £2·5m (£2·19m). Franked income £1·51m (£1·17m). Eps 9·4p (7·68p). Nav, prior charges at par, 676·4p (580·5p). Interim dividend 6p (5p) already declared.

Enery Resources and Services: Full year attributable profit $588,000 ($754,000). Dividends and interest received $1·06m ($129m). Eps 12c (15c). Nav $6·71 ($7·95). Dividend 15c (same) payable April 24.

George Blair: First half pre-tax profit £111,000 (£52,000) after interest charge of £122,000 (£126,000). Turnover £7·35m (£5·91m) including exports of £2·6m (£1·1m). Again no interim.

D. F. Bevan (Holdings): First half pre-tax profit £129,000 (£127,000) after interest charge of £161,000 (£152,000). Turnover £8·94m (£7·17m). Eps 1·26p (1·52p). Interim dividend again 0·25p, payable April 10.

BIDS AND DEALS

Blundell-Permoglaze

PAINT manufacturer Blundell-Permoglaze is making an agreed £1·92m offer for Hamilton Star which makes and sells paint brushes and specialist tools. Terms are—for each Hamilton share, 160p cash or 160p nominal of Blundell 10 p.c. unsecured loan notes, 1990.

Hamilton's net assets at July 31 last were £2·2m and pre-tax profits for the year then ended amounted to £354,000.

Dollar Land

JERSEY businessman David Kirch is to mop up the 15·8 p.c. he does not already own in Dollar Land Holdings in an agreed deal which values the North American property group at £5·10m. Through his company, Westways Holding, Mr Kirch is offering 170p a share cash which has the support of Dollar Land's independent directors.

Sime Darby

SIME DARBY, the Malaysian conglomerate, has agreed to sell R G Shaw & Company to an overseas company for about M$64m (£23·1m), from which Sime Darby will make an extraordinary profit of M$32m.

R G Shaw and its subsidiaries own 38·7 p.c. of Shaw Wallace & Co. of India which makes and distributes liquor, fertilisers, pesticides and adhesives there.

Shaw Wallace contributed to Sime Darby's group pre-tax profits at the annual rate of M$9·2m (£3·35m) in 1983-84.

APPOINTMENTS

Marlar Int.

BRIAN NICHOLSON, until recently joint managing director of THE OBSERVER, has been appointed executive chairman of Marlar International.

Major gains in private sector

MORE THAN 400 of Britain's most successful private companies more than doubled pre-tax profits in their latest trading year while 32 of them grew by more than 1,000 p.c. with profits ranging from £50,000 to £565,000.

These are among the facts presented in a new publication, *Growth Companies Register, which records the top 1,000 of the fastest growing private companies.

The majority, 547, showed profits of between £100,000 and £500,000 compared with 273 with profits of between £50,000 and £100,000 while 180 made profits of over £500,000.

Manufacturers accounted for 589 of the 1,000 companies showing an average growth in pre-tax profits of 166 p.c. against 189 p.c. for the 411 wholesale, retail and other distribution and service companies.

The highest growth rate was 34,100 p.c. recorded by Middlesex motor accessories dealer Gordon Spice which pushed up profits from £1,000 to £342,000 after a loss two years earlier of £540,000.

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Moment of truth for Dee

ALL WAS quiet in Silbury Boulevard last night as Alec Monk and his fellow directors of Dee Corporation retreated to their Milton Keynes bunker to consider how best to bid for Booker McConnell.

The Monopolies Commission has come down in favour of the bid being allowed to go ahead. But the process has taken so long — it was referred last June — that Dee is in nowhere near the strong position it was in when the first offer was made.

First, its bid put a bomb under the Booker management. With a new managing director, a handy leg-up from the dollar and the growing fashion for health orientated stocks, Booker has seen its shares romp ahead.

A year ago, the shares were little more than 100p — last night they closed at 256p, rising a mere 8p on the Monopolies Commission verdict. That puts a market value of £523 million on the business.

Secondly, the share price rise has been underpinned by anticipated profits growth. From £25·1 million before tax in 1983, profits are thought to have hit £34 million last year. The current year should see the figure passing comfortably through £40 million.

On the 1984 estimate, Booker is selling at a little over 16 times earnings, while the current year projection puts it on to a 12 times multiple.

The choice of whether to fight on 1984 or 1985 figures rests with Dee. If it bids within the next three weeks, Booker will find it hard to stand up a convincing 1985 forecast. It will also find few takers to the notion that a 16-plus exit multiple is a gross undervaluation.

But if Dee chooses to wait more than three weeks, the bid cannot be renewed until June, by which time Booker will be well into current year trade and could come up with some fancy numbers if the occasion demands it.

Thirdly, Dee already has a great deal on its management plate, including the integration of International Stores, and might be reluctant to start a new takeover battle until its resources are less fully utilised.

If it does choose to fight now a prospective price-earnings ratio of around 15 times, including International's contribution, is a reasonable base from which to attack.

Anglia short of sparkle

SODASTREAM has knocked some of the sparkle out of Anglia Television's full-year profits to October 31, but, thanks to a bumper year for television advertising, the figures have emerged in line with most expectations.

Pre-tax profits have jumped from £2·68 million to £4·5 million, despite a £1·4 million swing round into the red by the associates. Sodastream, in which the company has a stake totalling about 25 p.c., can take most of the blame for this, with a deficit of £524,000.

Sodastream should make partial amends in the current year, given that its sales have perked up in the last few months following the launch of the new Carnival machine in November.

But problems for the television contracting sector may be about to begin.

Television advertising peaked during the year, and actually started to dip from the autumn onwards. That trend appears to be continuing, and given that a marked increase in the wage bill is already agreed, labour costs, which account for 70 p.c. of total expenses, are bound to squeeze margins.

As if that were not enough to be getting on with, the Treasury is promising a review of the system for calculating Exchequer levy. This is expected to lead to an increase in the actual rate whatever happens but there is a real fear that the levy will be calculated on turnover rather than on profits.

At a time of narrowing profit margins that is a particularly unhappy prospect.

This year, even allowing for an improvement in Sodastream, profits are unlikely to top £5 million pre-tax by very much and a prospective multiple of 11 will have to lean on its 7 p.c. yield for support.

Sit tight with James Neill

ALL'S WELL that ends well, and certainly everything has ended happily for Suter and its intended takeover victim James Neill Holdings.

Suter is happy because when it sold its shares last Friday it collected a profit of about £1 million. Cazenove, which placed the 11·8 p.c. stake, is happy in being able to collect commission on nearly £4 million of business. Christopher Moran, who held 400,000 Neill shares, cheerfully sold his stake an hour or so after Suter.

But the champagne really flowed in Sheffield because Neill appears to have shaken off the threat of acquisition, and by all accounts fully deserved to do so.

The company said yesterday that second half profits would show a solid improvement on those of the first. That puts a base of at least 3 million before tax under 1984 profit estimates, with the possibility of as much as £3·5 million.

Profits last saw this sort of level in 1979, before the recession pushed the business into loss. But after a vigorous rationalisation programme, Neill is now beginning to earn adequate profits again.

The management has accepted the need to concentrate on the profitability of all its lines, and although margins will never be wonderful in the band tool business, recovery is coming through quickly.

In the current year, attention will be turned to seeking out new markets, such as the retail trade, and profits are set for another good increase—perhaps reaching the peak £4·4 million of 1977.

Meanwhile, a valuation of the pension fund has disclosed a surplus which means that Neill may be able to cut its contributions by as much as £30,000 a year. A sale of surplus property, where it has permission to build a retail superstore, could yield more than £1 million.

The shares at 136p have risen by 270 p.c. since the beginning of last year, but still stand on a price-earnings ratio of less than 10. Investors have no need to follow Suter's example.

MONEY & EXCHANGES

THE pound's international value fell from 71·3 to a new all-time "low" of 70·7 on foreign exchanges yesterday as oil price fears and the absence of central bank intervention hit confidence.

The pound suffered most in terms of the dollar, losing 1·18 cents to close at $1·1095. But it also lost ground to the German mark and other major currencies.

The weakness of sterling renewed fears that interest rates in Britain will have to rise again. The cost of wholesale funds in London jumped by at least ¼ p.c., taking the key three-month interbank rate to 12¼ p.c.

The Bank of England was believed to have provided modest support for sterling on the exchanges. It also acted to keep the banking system liquid by buying £590 million of bills to relieve a cash shortage of around £550 million.

SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT

in a high volume, 'high-tech' environment

Our client is a medium sized division of a large and prosperous electronics/telecommunications manufacturer. The division is self-reliant in the design, development, manufacturing and international sales and marketing of a range of intelligent telephony equipment – backed by high-level investment at home and overseas.

This is the type of opportunity which should attract any self-respecting Software Development Engineer. Your responsibility for your product will run from concept through test to manufacture and beyond to market acceptance and after-sales quality audit.

The Engineer will join a small team of professionals testing current product software, working on new products and promoting future applications. Candidates must have sound experience of small (4k) micro-processors, utilised in volume manufactures – domestic appliances for example – ASSEMBLER language, a clear history of introducing successful products and supervisory ability. A degree is a distinct advantage and the demands on experience indicate an age of 30 plus.

Location is Northern Home Counties with opportunities to travel regularly. The Company offers a salary of c £15,000, good benefits, working conditions, generous re-location expenses and career prospects.

Telephone today between 5.00pm and 8.00pm, Thursday 24 January, or Friday 25, on 01-240 9555 for an informal discussion on the post, the company and you. Alternatively, write with full details quoting ref: 337 to Terry Fuller, at Deansgate Management Services, 63/66 St. Martin's Lane, London WC2N 4JX.

Accountant

Herts To £12,000

Our client is the highly successful U.K. subsidiary of a major Italian multinational, operating in the confectionery market. Exponential growth in this country has led to a requirement for a young, commercially-oriented accountant to assist the Financial Controller.

The role will cover elements of both management and financial accounting, together with various administrative responsibilities, and will grow in stature and scope commensurately with the company itself.

Candidates should be part – or fully – qualified, with several years' broadly-based accounting experience which should have included an involvement with computerised accounts. A fluid intelligence and a congenial personality are essential attributes; the preferred age range is 25-35.

In addition to the salary quoted, the position carries a range of benefits including health insurance.

Applications, please, quoting Ref. 138/1/DT, to: Charles Barker Management Selection International Ltd., 30 Farringdon Street, London EC4A 4EA. Telephone 01-634 1142.

MARKETING DIRECTOR MONOTYPE INTERNATIONAL

High Tech involvement in the Pre-press Sector

Up to £20K + car Surrey

The turnround and subsequent growth of Monotype International is one of the 1980's success stories. Many companies have reduced overheads by slashing costs, but few can match the subsequent increase in sales turnover, achieved by the development of new technology (laser imaging and optical systems) and by opening up new markets. To develop this process further the company is looking for a Marketing Director to take over the entire function, from product concept, planning and timing through product management to advertising, sales promotion and publicity. The international network of distributors and agents takes some 80% of the product, and there are additional new overseas markets to be developed, so an awareness of international marketing is vital. Similarly an imaginative approach to the application of the product to the needs of in-plant users both offers growth potential in the UK and postulates other strengths we will be seeking. The ideal candidate will be late 30's/early 40's, of graduate calibre if not qualification, an experienced capital equipment marketing manager (able to motivate and control a sizeable and bright young team), with firsthand knowledge of the pre-press industry. Monotype is an exciting star to which to hitch your wagon.

Male or female candidates should send full career details to Terry Ward, quoting reference LI5001.

REACHING A NEW HIGH IN HIGH TECHNOLOGY

WARTON, LANCASHIRE

Innovation has become the watchword of the Warton Division of British Aerospace plc. As an acknowledged world leader in the design and development of high performance supersonic combat aircraft, we are continually breaking technology barriers. If the technology doesn't exist, we create it.

To maintain and stretch our lead, we require innovative people to work on a diverse range of challenging aerospace technology projects.

One such project is the Experimental Aircraft Programme – technology demonstrator, due to fly next year (just 3 years after conception). This one-off aircraft will bring together three major technologies: carbon fibre composites; active control technology, utilising high speed computers to artificially stabilise the aircraft; and an advanced electronic cockpit, designed to reduce pilot workload to an absolute minimum.

Success with Jaguar and Tornado has given us unique experience of multi-national collaboration and stands us in good stead for the joint development of a European Fighter Aircraft for the 1990s and beyond. Such projects present us with many fascinating technological challenges. Take up the challenge – success can bring high rewards in terms of job satisfaction, career interest, state-of-the-art technology and well-paid prospects.

AVIONICS SYSTEMS DESIGN AND MANAGEMENT

Challenging opportunities in design and test engineering await candidates with a minimum qualification of degree or equivalent in Electronics, Computer Science, Physics or Mathematics, backed by several years' relevant industrial experience. Duties involve highly demanding work on a wide range of advanced systems and sub-systems, including navigation, weapons and armaments, radar, communications, controls and displays, electronic warfare and electro-optics.

Our immediate requirements include:

AVIONICS SYSTEMS ANALYSTS
For the assessment of large and complex systems and for C^3I management.

ENGINEERS
With specialist experience in electro-magnetic compatibility, data transmission systems (especially including knowledge of MIL STD 1553B); and signal processing.

SOFTWARE ENGINEERS
For the development of methods and methodology for a large range of software applications.

SOFTWARE SPECIALISTS
For the fundamental and detailed design of real-time programmes using high order language.

SYSTEMS ENGINEERS
For the design of integrated weapons systems. People with experience of top-down structured design would be preferred.

ELECTRONICS ENGINEERING

There are opportunities for suitably qualified and experienced personnel to play positive roles in all aspects of the design and implementation of electronics systems, especially in the following areas:

- Avionics systems • Computer networking
- Factory automation • Ground test systems
- Office systems.

We invite applications from those with a degree or equivalent in Electronics Engineering, Computer Sciences or related science subjects but our interest is in good all round ability as well as specialised academic qualifications. In particular, we are looking for practical experience in one or more of the following:

- Circuit Design • Electronic packaging • Computer networking • Microprocessor systems • Control systems design • Hardware interfacing techniques
- Design of real-time distributed computing systems
- Software design/programming in languages ranging from Assembler to high level.

As a major international employer we offer excellent terms and conditions of employment. Situated in an attractive area on the Fylde Coast, Warton Aerodrome is close to the Lake District and has good road and rail links to the rest of the country. Pleasant residential areas, with ample educational, shopping and leisure facilities are within easy commuting distance of the site, and all the amenities of Preston and Blackpool are close by.

Assistance with relocation expenses will be given to help those moving into the area.

For an application form, please telephone Mr T. I. Salt on 0772-633333, ext 642, or write quoting Ref: DT/1/85

Production Manager

An experienced line manager's role in small batch manufacturing

Up to £15,000 p.a.

Our client, a major group of companies based on the South Coast, have a requirement for an experienced Production Manager to successfully control and co-ordinate production activity embracing small batch manufacturing and assembly.

Reporting to the Chief Executive on site, the prime requirement is to 'make things happen', with the ability to maintain a high degree of flexibility and co-operation between management and shop floor areas. Responsibilities will also include ensuring that production and delivery schedules are met, using knowledge gained in a light engineering industry.

Industrial relations in this unit are excellent and programmes to improve productivity are already underway. Considerable departmental support exists in purchasing, material control and industrial engineering, and the person appointed will have the ability to motivate and improve performances using these resources and their own innovative skills.

This is an excellent career opportunity for a Line Manager qualified to HND standard in Mechanical Engineering who is looking for progression in a dynamic organisation with a strong commitment to further business growth.

Initially, please send your c.v. and indicate any company you would not wish your application to be considered by, to: C. Coalston (Ref: 5318), Village Advertising Ltd., 44 Wellington Street, Covent Garden, London WC2E 7DJ.

Group Product Manager

West Midlands c. £12,500 + Car

Founded nearly a century ago the U.K. company Helix Limited is one of the world's most noted manufacturers of educational and office stationery products and drawing instruments. As well as U.K. sales, exports account for a major part of the company's multi-million pound turnover.

Continuing growth and re-organisation demands the appointment of a highly motivated and creative product manager who will assume responsibility for increasing market penetration of a group of the company's noted educational and stationery products.

Development of marketing strategies, market research, new product development, sales promotion and major contributions to the company's strategic business planning forum will be some of the important responsibilities of this growth appointment.

Ideally aged around 25 to 30, the woman or man appointed will have a degree or relative qualification plus proven successful marketing experience, preferably F.M.C.G. biased towards a female audience.

Applicants should write enclosing a brief C.V. or telephone for a personal record form to Ann Turner, Helix Limited, P.O. Box 15, Lye, Stourbridge, West Midlands, DY9 7AJ. Telephone (038 482) 4441.

Link Management Selection

AUTOMOTIVE PARTS REGIONAL MANAGEMENT

Up to £12,000 + incentive + car

Throughout the motor industry/trade, there appears to be a belief – either stated or unstated – that Parts Management are second-class citizens when compared to the Vehicle specialists. Here at least is one major Parts Distributor, with a nationwide network, who refuses to accept this patently absurd notion. The growth of the parts market in recent years, and the anxiety of even the prime manufacturers themselves to broaden their base in that market, demonstrates the profit potential available to companies prepared to take a fresh commercial approach. The key is, as always, the people. We are looking for additional regional sales managers who will see their main role as encouraging and cajoling the individual Parts Operations on their patch to maximise sales and optimise profit, for their own and for the Distributor's benefit. We are only interested in bright, young, qualified people who know the market but who are already irritated by that "second class" tag. They, in turn, will be looking for a company that knows where it is going and that wants to make the most of both its opportunities and its staff. Openings are possible throughout the UK.

Please write to Robin Davies, quoting reference LMS 5002.

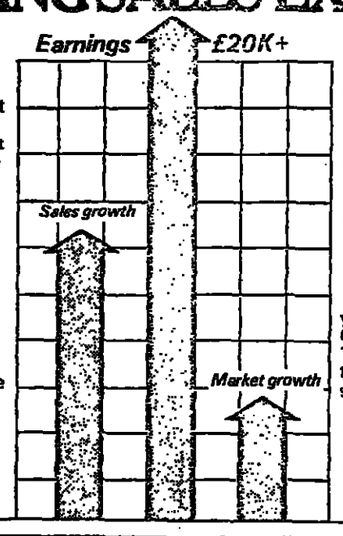
THE RIGHT ENVIRONMENT FOR HIGH-FLYING SALES EXECUTIVES



We're looking for sales high-flyers - people who have the ability to negotiate successfully at a senior level over a period of months to clinch a major contract and who want to maximise earnings whilst building a successful career.

The environment is very definitely growth-orientated. We operate at the 'top end' of the copier market concentrating on volume sales to large multi-user clients. We're successful with sales having increased significantly in each of the last 3 years in a market sector that is also growing fast. So you can imagine the potential!

Which is why we're seeking ambitious sales people with either copier or capital goods experience to maximise our business THROUGHOUT THE UK.

And we have much to offer in return. Realistic earnings of £20k+ (with probably the highest 'basic' in our industry), first class training plus guaranteed commission in the first 6 months, a product range famous for quality and reliability plus the support of the largest European copier manufacturer that is already developing in to the sophisticated automated office equipment market.

If this is the future you see for yourself, phone JIM ROCKALL ON 01-502-1851 BETWEEN 10am-9pm, TODAY JAN 24th to arrange a local interview or send your CV to him at

Maximise Management Skills in the High Street

Training Executive

From £14,500 + Car

The rapid expansion and diversification of the Harris Queensway Group has been simply staggering in the last few years. At present, turnover in the Company's ten Divisions is in excess of £300 million, with 7,000 staff employed and more than 700 stores trading throughout the U.K.

As our client's new Training Executive, reporting to the Group Personnel Director, you will help to identify and implement essential training projects throughout the Group, notably including the development of a Stores management development programme.

Equally proficient in "up-front" or programme planning activities, you must have several years' experience in a similar capacity preferably gained within a multiple retailing environment. Aged 25-35 years, of graduate calibre and possibly M.I.T.D. qualified, you will welcome the stimulus and challenge of an exciting, dynamic business. Being also astute, adaptable, intuitive and calm under pressure, you instinctively relate to others at all levels of status and responsibility.

An excellent range of benefits include Pension/Life Assurance, BUPA, Staff Discount and subsidised canteen facilities. It is anticipated that you currently reside within commuting distance of the Group's head office in Orpington, Kent, but relocation assistance will be considered, if appropriate.

If you feel confident that you match our requirements, please ring or preferably write to me, Richard J. Sowerby, Sowerby's (Selection) Ltd., Personnel Consultants, 500 Chesham House, 150 Regent Street, London W1R 5FA. Tel: 01-439 6238.

Retail Management Experience

EARLY TO MID 20'S

Sharpen and broaden your career with one of the UK's most successful retailers

SavaCentre

Since SavaCentre was formed as a joint J. Sainsbury and British Home Stores enterprise in the mid 70's, we have opened six major hypermarkets – Washington (Tyne & Wear), Hempstead (Kent), Basildon (Essex), Oldbury (West Midlands), Calcot (Berks) and Edinburgh – and have plans for future development.

We currently have a number of opportunities for retail professionals who will be expected to take control of a section of merchandise in one of our stores. Reporting to a Senior Department Manager, responsibilities will include stock control, standards of display, customer service and staff motivation and control. However, the scale of our operation requires combined effort and you will be expected to be an active member of the store management team.

Aged in your early to mid 20's, you should have food or non-food retail management experience and a desire to respond to the challenge of hypermarket retailing. Our standards are high and the scale of the business offers a real opportunity to develop a broad based career. Mobility will obviously be an important factor in your ability to take advantage of the opportunities we offer.

For our part we shall provide you with a thorough induction to the Company taking into account your previous background and experience. We offer an attractive starting salary backed up by the range of benefits expected of a major organisation – including generous assistance with relocation expenses, where appropriate.

Interested? Then write with full personal and career details to: Dory Sadler, Personnel Manager, SavaCentre Ltd., 45-47 Peach Street, Wokingham, Berks RG11 1XJ.

Chartered Mechanical or Chemical Engineer

. . . for key role in a major capital accounting project

DAIRY CREST

ATTRACTIVE SALARY + CAR

Dairy Crest Foods, the UK's leading dairy foods company with a turnover of £900m, has set up a capital accounting project team, charged with the task of standardising company records for both leased and owned assets. We now need a Chartered Engineer to join this team for approximately 12 months.

As a team member you will be involved with historical records and be responsible for implementing a standard defined approach to the verification and identification of physical assets for both historical cost and current cost purposes.

Qualified to Chartered Engineer status – ideally mechanical or chemical – you must have relevant experience of project process engineering work in a similar or related industry. Familiarity with the preparation of documents for data entry would be an advantage.

The post will involve substantial travel and the majority of the working time will be spent at our factory sites, which are located throughout England and Wales. Visits will also be necessary to our Head Office in Surrey.

We offer an excellent salary, dependent on experience, and a benefits package which includes a company car.

Please write or telephone for an application form to Mrs. E. Hill, Senior Personnel Officer, Dairy Crest Foods, Portsmouth Road, Thames Ditton, Surrey KT7 0EL. Tel: 01-398 2853.

Opportunities for growth in Quality Assurance

MIDDLESEX

THORN EMI Electronics, one of the fastest growing companies in the defence field, is highly respected in the industry for the professionalism of its QA function.

Now, due to a substantial re-organisation of our business in order to exploit current successes and future opportunities, we seek several additional Quality Assurance professionals at our Feltham operation.

In particular we wish to appoint:

Project Quality Engineers – Hardware & Software . . . to work on state-of-the-art projects and be responsible for the management and implementation of project quality assurance activities – from design study through production, to in-service support. This will require significant involvement in the engineering aspects of the projects and liaison with design teams, support services and senior staff, both in other companies and the MoD.

You will need to be qualified to degree or HNC level, with at least two years' relevant experience within the defence industry.

Calibration Engineers . . . to service, repair, and calibrate a wide range of equipment – from in-house process control equipment, through production test rigs, to the very latest proprietary test equipment.

In addition to a qualification to City & Guilds ONC level in electrical or electronic engineering, you must have at least two years' practical calibration service experience.

Test Engineers . . . to undertake testing, during the development and production of advanced electronic equipment, at PCB, sub-assembly, unit, and overall system level. The work involves both digital and analogue techniques, with frequencies up to microwave level and an involvement with microprocessors.

You should be qualified to at least City & Guilds ONC level in electrical or electronic engineering and have a minimum of two years' hands-on test experience.

These important positions offer both attractive salaries and a comprehensive benefits package. Opportunities for further career progression are excellent.

Please write or telephone with relevant career details to Sue Godfrey, Personnel Department, THORN EMI Electronics Limited, Defence Systems Division, Victoria Road, Feltham, Middx. Tel: 01-890 3600, ext. 2325.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERS. Develop your career in the world of ICI.

VARIOUS LOCATIONS. SALARIES UP TO £15,000

INTEREST CHALLENGE INNOVATION

ICI is a world leader in the development, manufacture and marketing of an extensive range of chemical and industrial products. The Petrochemicals and Plastics Division, one of the largest operating units of ICI, is engaged in the production of a variety of high quality products ranging from primary chemicals based on oil, through intermediates to highly specialised composites and materials, sold in substantial volumes to international markets.

The Division's major manufacturing base and Technical Centre, home of some of the most advanced technology in the industry, are located at Wilton-on Teesside.

CAREER VARIETY MEANS CAREER DEVELOPMENT

The size of ICI means Mechanical Engineers have the opportunity to gain skills in a variety of areas, accelerating their career prospects probably further than in any other organisation. In ICI this has resulted in Engineers currently holding many executive positions.

For example, you could join as a plant engineer with line management responsibilities for the maintenance of major plant. This will involve problem solving, design and operational improvements, coupled with the day-to-day running of an engineering team.

Alternatively, you could join a multi-disciplinary project engineering group, assigned to a business to take a much harder, longer term overview of particular projects, to improve operating efficiency, or to develop new products.

Interchange and diversification are the keynotes of the ICI career development plan, and within 2 to 3 years ambitious, committed engineers can achieve promotion to more senior management roles within production, corporate engineering or commercial functions.

YOUR BACKGROUND

Essentially, you will be a Graduate Mechanical Engineer, probably aged under 30, and ideally have around 2 years' experience of major plant design, operation or maintenance. You will be looking for an opportunity to join an organisation where your skills and drive will be rewarded by progression through a well defined career path.

WHAT'S IN IT FOR YOU?

A highly competitive initial salary up to £15,000 plus an excellent benefits package, combine with superb career prospects to make these opportunities very attractive propositions. Individually tailored career programmes will enable those who have not already attained Chartered Engineer status to obtain this qualification.

WHERE YOU WILL BE WORKING

There are several posts available on Teesside, with other openings at various locations, including Dumfries in Scotland, Colchester in Essex and Darwin and Hillhouse in Lancashire.

HOW TO APPLY

Candidates should submit their cv or telephone for an application form to: K H Thompson, Hoggett Bowers plc, 4 Mosley Street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, NE1 1DE. Tel: 0632-327455, quoting reference 46009/DT.

Local interviews will be arranged.

Senior Reservoir Engineer

MAKE A STEP CHANGE IN YOUR CAREER TO WORK AT THE FOREFRONT OF SUBSEA TECHNOLOGY

Hamilton Brothers has shown itself to be at the forefront of subsea marginal field development, and second to none in its ability to respond quickly and professionally to the new challenges facing North Sea operators. The Company is aggressively expanding, and offers you the opportunity to become involved in new projects with the chance to develop innovative solutions to the problems which will occur.

In this London based position, your main task will involve full responsibility for planning and reservoir management of a field newly on production and which is one of the first in the next generation of North Sea fields to be developed. In addition you will have the opportunity to work on other projects covering the full range of oil, gas condensate, and gas fields.

To be a candidate you will ideally have about 5 years broad reservoir engineering experience some of which will have been in the North Sea and include well testing and analysis, reservoir simulation, modelling and reservoir development planning.

The Company's salary scales are competitive with the best in the industry and in addition there is a first class benefits package which includes company pension and private medical insurance schemes, and a company car.

To apply, please write to Summit Management Consultants Limited, Cavendish Court, 11/15 Wigmore Street, London W1H 9LB or. telephone (01) 629 3532.

SMCL OIL & GAS RECRUITMENT

SENIOR DRILLING ENGINEER

SALARY BAND £25-£30,000 PLUS CAR

An opportunity to set up and run drilling engineering activities; become a more rounded Petroleum Engineer and develop your managerial skills with an expanding independent oil company.

With several interests in both producing and developing fields, our client is set to increase its activities as operator of exploration acreage. Currently the operator of 3 blocks, they are aggressively bidding for new acreage offshore UK, both through the 9th round and farm-ins. This is your opportunity to play a key role in this exciting new phase of the company's activity.

You will be the company's first UK drilling specialist responsible for designing and overseeing drilling programmes, including wells scheduled for 1985. You will also monitor activities in non-operated ventures developing your managerial and negotiating skills representing the company at consortia meetings.

The company is a substantial US independent which has demonstrated its commitment to the career development of its British staff: all managerial positions here are held by UK nationals who have generally been promoted from within.

To become the Drilling Engineering Specialist in this small high calibre team you should possess an appropriate degree and five years North Sea drilling experience.

The excellent salary will be supplemented by a company car, pension scheme and private medical insurance.

To apply, please write to Summit Management Consultants Limited, Cavendish Court, 11/15 Wigmore Street, London W1H 9LB or telephone (01) 629 3532.

Technical Director

British Midland

British Midland Airways — once again voted "Best Domestic Airline" — is a major independent UK scheduled carrier and the second most frequent operator from Heathrow. From its base at East Midlands Airport, it operates domestic and international services with its DC9, F27 and SD360 fleet.
The Technical Director is a member of the Management Board and is responsible, through a staff of 300, for all technical, engineering, procurement and quality aspects of the airline's operations. In addition, he or she handles the negotiation of substantial contracts with suppliers of engineering services and, importantly, will continue the development of third-party airline engineering business at the East Midlands maintenance base.
The need, therefore, is for proven commercial and business development skills combined with a strong technical and engineering management background — ideally, but not necessarily, gained within an airline or aircraft engineering environment.
Candidates are likely to be engineering graduates aged 35 to 45; they will certainly be attracted by the opportunity to develop an aircraft engineering business which will become a significant contributor to Group profits. Base salary is unlikely to be less than £25,000 and could well be more, together with car, BUPA and airline industry benefits.
Please send cv, in confidence, to Mike Brown, Manager, Technology Group. Ref: MV43/9084/DT, PA Personnel Services, Hyde Park House, 60a Knightsbridge, London SW1X 7LE.

Major Opportunities in Electronic Design

Home Counties

Our client, already a brand leader in the field of electronic controls for domestic and commercial purposes, now leads in the development of techniques using infra-red and mains signalling for energy management.
The company's international success has been built upon technical innovation, linked to market needs. Future development plans create the need for a Chief Design Engineer, to join as a key member of the management team and for an Electronic Design Engineer.

Head of Engineering
£18,000 to £22,000 + executive car

An individual of proven creative talent, managerial ability and enthusiasm is sought. The principal responsibility will be to lead and inspire the design and development of innovative electronic/electrical products at prices which reflect market and financial needs.
A degree in electronics/electrical engineering is required with, possibly, membership of the IEE. Wide-ranging experience must include the management of development programmes; dealing with the standards and approval organisations; maintaining parts lists and drawings; and all other engineering departmental matters, including quality assurance. It is essential that candidates have the depth of technical knowledge in electronic, electrical and mechanical disciplines, in high-volume products and the capacity for detail to realise the necessary product features for successful market penetration.

Electronic Design Engineer
£9,000 to £12,000

There is an urgent need for an Electronic Engineer to assist in the design and development of a new range of products.
Applicants should be educated to HNC/HND level or equivalent and have at least two years' practical experience in digital, analogue and microprocessor hardware design. Some experience in Assembly Language programming (MOTOROLA'S) is also desirable but not essential.
Benefits for both positions include non-contributory pension scheme, sick scheme and four weeks' holiday per annum.
Please send full cv which will be forwarded to our client unopened. (Address to our Security Manager if listing companies to which it should not be sent.)

High-Tech Manufacturing

Production Control Manager
MIS Manager
Financial Controller Designate

A specialist manufacturer and distributor of electronic components, my client is a highly profitable subsidiary of a publicly quoted UK group of companies. With an estimated two-year lead over competitors in the development of its high-technology products, the company has a turnover of £8.5m and is poised for a major programme of expansion, acquisition and increased efficiency which will take it to £20m within three years.
This is a major and radical progression for the company, and to provide the necessary infrastructure of professional management it wishes to recruit three senior managers.
The Production Control Manager will replace the current ad hoc system of production control and inventory management with an effective methodology and systems for all manufacturing activities, from material procurement to final despatch. Ref: W96/9090/DT.
The MIS Manager will replace the current small and separate computer installations with an entire integrated MIS. Your ongoing task will be the continued refinement of the system to meet the needs of your user departments. Ref: MV96/9092/DT.
The Financial Controller Designate will be a qualified accountant who will initiate a formal accounting system providing standard, process and product costing to tight timescales, plus regular up-to-date management accounts for the manufacturing and distribution departments. Ref: AA96/9091/DT. Probably a graduate, in your 30s, currently working in the manufacturing industry — preferably electronics or light engineering — you will have had direct responsibility for staff and also for the computerisation of manual systems within your own specialised field. Reporting to the relevant director, you will see this as a unique opportunity to prove your skills and form your own team in this rapidly expanding organisation.
The remuneration package is pitched to attract the right calibre of applicant who, in addition to normal large-company benefits, may be offered a disturbance allowance plus full relocation package to Scotland if appropriate.
Telephone or write for an application form or send detailed cv giving salary progression, in confidence, to Douglas Kinnaird, quoting the appropriate ref., PA Personnel Services, Fitzpatrick House, 14/18 Cadogan Street, Glasgow G2 6QP.

Crane is an established engineering company and part of an international group. Turnover is in excess of £30 million pa and the company is seeking further growth by expansion and acquisition.
The Financial Controller is responsible to the General Manager for all accounting services, and as one of a professional management team, plays an active part in running the business.
The ideal candidate will be aged 25+ with management level experience of modern industrial accounting using computer techniques. He/she will demonstrate strong potential for a wider business career.
Generous relocation assistance will be given to our attractive coastal location in Suffolk.
Please write in confidence with career and salary details, to: Peter Rains, Employee Relations Manager, Crane Limited, Nacton Road, Ipswich, Suffolk.

Designers – Electrical Industry

London

Our client, a well-established company, designs and manufactures quality transformers for a number of major high-technology companies. They now have two outstanding opportunities at senior and junior levels for qualified electrical engineers.
Senior Designer — General Manager Designate: (£15,000 including profit-sharing). You will provide a complete design service to meet customer specifications, and prove yourself for top-management responsibilities. At least two years' electrical design experience is essential.
Designer: (c.£9,000): You will concentrate on the design of transformers to detailed customer specifications. Previous experience is desirable.
Salaries are backed by attractive benefits and relocation assistance, where appropriate.
Please send full cv which will be forwarded to our client unopened. (Address to our Security Manager if listing companies to which it should not be sent.)

Production Engineer

High-technology metal forming

Although carrying the formal title of 'Production Engineer' this advertisement could well be headed 'Original Thinker'. The company is engaged in heavy presswork and top-quality stampings necessitating frequent material and tool changes, and the Managing Director is looking for an enterprising, cheerful and forceful young graduate, aged 25-30, to apply a fresh mind, uncluttered by the traditions of the industry, to such problems as layout, work flow and mechanical-handling aids. The successful candidate could see a very real route through to a production or works management post as a natural follow-on to his or her earlier project work. The company is situated in one of the most attractive areas in the South Midlands; a starting salary in the £12,000–£13,000 bracket is envisaged; and eligible candidates reviewing their medium to long-term career prospects should seriously consider this opportunity.

Sales Engineers

Special applications in water-jet cutting
Based S Home Counties
excellent neg. basic salary + incentive scheme + car

The success of this well-established subsidiary of a well-known, successful UK engineering group, derives from the close integration of its manufacturing, marketing and after-sales service activities, and an absolutely first-class product range. Its products are high-pressure, water-jetting pumps and associated equipment used in heavy-duty industrial and marine cleaning and maintenance, and in abrasive jet cutting.
Now, with the range of applications growing ever wider in these fields, several Sales Engineers are needed to help develop the considerable potential of these market segments.
For these particularly challenging and fascinating appointments, we wish to talk with those who have achieved a high level of technical competence by applying sound engineering backgrounds within the sales and applications engineering functions, and who possess a high degree of flair, imagination and creativity.
Good business French, Italian or German would be an added plus but by no means essential. Age is immaterial.

Industrial Contracts Manager Kuwait

c.£27,500 tax-free

Our client is an established Kuwait-based contractor employing over 500 people. The firm is diversifying within the construction and engineering sectors, particularly in the fields of steel fabrication, petrochemical, mechanical and electrical engineering and surface preparation.
Planned expansion has created a vacancy for a Manager to head the Contracts Department which comprises about 20 design, estimating and cost-control staff whose functions are to prepare tenders and contracts, and to control contracts in progress, which are often on a joint-venture or turnkey basis. The Contracts Manager will liaise and negotiate with clients.
The job should interest qualified engineers in their 30s or 40s with appropriate management experience particularly in the petrochemical construction and maintenance sector. Enthusiasm, adaptability and good written and spoken English are needed. Arabic would be a bonus.
Tax-free salary, car, luxurious air-conditioned family accommodation and annual passage-paid home leave are among the benefits.
Write in confidence, enclosing cv, to Humphrey Sturt, Ref: W69/9100/DT, PA Personnel Services, Hyde Park House, 60a Knightsbridge, London SW1X 7LE.
Telephone: 01-235 6060.

Engineering Manager

Cardiff
c.£20,000 + car

Amersham Cardiff Laboratories

Amersham International is a high technology company providing specialised products for use in health care, life-sciences research, and industry — most of which are based on radioactive materials, but we are expanding the range of our non-radioactive products to serve the ever changing needs of customers.
This key role offers the significant opportunity of heading up the multi-disciplinary engineering function of our rapidly evolving Cardiff site — a 30 acre, 200,000 sq. ft. facility currently employing some 500 people which is being considered for further and considerable capital investment to drive up profitable growth.
Reporting to the General Manager your responsibilities will encompass all aspects of a substantial function which provides a comprehensive site engineering and maintenance service within an agreed plan direct accountability for key project work relating to the planning, design and installation of new facilities, plant and equipment, and related safety matters to meet statutory and company obligations.
To fulfil the demanding nature of this appointment you will need to be at least 35 years of age and a qualified engineer with a proven record of achievement in engineering which includes several years at management level in a progressive batch/process manufacturing environment. An 'up to the minute' appreciation of manufacturing and engineering techniques (including CAD) is essential. Leadership and man management skills of the highest order are vital.
This is an influential role in a well established management team committed to achieving change to meet critical business objectives.
Excellent remuneration package includes a salary, negotiable as indicated and a company car. Generous relocation assistance will be given where appropriate.
Please write quoting reference CR 171, giving concise career details to: Mr P J Williams, Senior Personnel Officer, Amersham International plc, Forest Farm, Whitchurch, Cardiff CF4 7YT.

General Management – Branch Operations

c.£17,500 + car

Our client, a leading national distributor and part of a large group, wishes to appoint a General Manager for its Southern Region.
The post combines the responsibilities for sales admin, purchasing, and customer service together with the accountancy function which extends to the provision of financial services and controls to other group activities.
Aged 35 or over, the successful candidate will have had extensive general management experience in a fast-moving, marketing orientated, distribution/customer-service company, and will preferably have a business-studies degree or equivalent.
The remuneration is negotiable as indicated plus car and usual large-company benefits including relocation assistance where appropriate.
Please send full career details, including current salary, or apply for an application form, to Tim Harney, Ref: GM97/9094/DT, PA Personnel Services, 73-79 King Street, Manchester M2 2JL. Tel: 061-236 4531.

Trainee Export Sales Manager

Outstanding career opportunity with a market leader

Crabtree Vickers Gateshead

If you firmly believe that you have got what it takes to survive in the rough and tumble world of export sales management then this is the job for you. If you are articulate, in your mid 20s to 30s with sound commercial acumen and a practical, determined and results oriented approach then you are reading the right advertisement.
Crabtree Vickers Gateshead, a member of the Vickers Group of companies, is the market force in sheet-fed metal decorating presses which are supplied to discerning customers, worldwide — and business is good.
Reporting to the Sales and Marketing Director you will receive comprehensive sales, product, industry and technique training and as you and the job develop you will become increasingly involved in all aspects of exporting including regular overseas travel.
This is a rare opportunity to develop a rewarding career in export sales management, to assist in the marketing of our quality products, to gain wide ranging experience and to establish your reputation as an export professional.
Whilst an aptitude for foreign languages and/or engineering qualification would be useful they are not essential.
Success in this role will bring greater responsibilities, rewards and promotion within 1-2 years. An attractive benefits package will be negotiable.
Relocation assistance will be given where appropriate.
Please write with cv or telephone for an application form to: Mr P Clancy, Personnel Manager, Crabtree Vickers Gateshead, Kingsway, Team Valley, Gateshead NE11 0SU.

Seismic Personnel

Due to continuing substantial expansion, GECO UK requires the following personnel for work in their Data Processing Centres in Orpington and overseas. We are looking for people with the expertise and enthusiasm to further enhance GECO's considerable reputation within the oil industry.

Experienced Processing Geophysicists

We require experienced land and marine processing personnel with either a numerate degree or the equivalent extra experience. Opportunities are available to work in the UK and many overseas environments: Europe, N. Africa, Middle East, Far East, New Zealand. Immediate availability of personnel is desirable but not essential due to our projected requirements throughout 1985.

GECO operate AMDAHL, NORSEIS, SEL and VAX systems worldwide. Our Geophysical Applications programs are common to all hardware configurations and between land and marine work. We are thus able to offer the production geophysicist a career which is both interesting and varied and where geographical relocation is not prejudiced by the need to retrain on different applications software.

Competitive salaries, commensurate with experience, are offered. Overseas postings feature a comprehensive range of company supplied facilities (accommodation, transport etc) combined with attractive end of contract bonuses.

Seismic Applications Programmers

Vacancies also exist within GECO UK for seismic applications programmers. Experience is not essential but a numerate degree or equivalent work experience would be advantageous.

In addition to salary GECO UK offers an excellent benefits package consisting of non-contributory pension, disability/life assurance and BUPA.

Production Management via Work Study

Attractive Salary Lake District

As an autonomous subsidiary of an international Group, K Shoemakers has an enviable record of product innovation, growth and profit. In the last few years we have invested heavily in new factories, equipment and advanced technology. An important part of our success is also our commitment to the training and development of young graduates to positions of early responsibility.

As part of our current plans we wish to recruit a young manager who will quickly establish him/herself within the Work Study function. The task here will be cost saving manufacturing projects in our Cumbrian factories. This experience will form an ideal base after 9/12 months for a move into manufacturing, leading quickly to factory management.

Applicants should be graduates with 1 or 2 years experience in manufacturing, or those from another discipline who feel they may have made the wrong career choice. You must have the ability and ambition to accept responsibility quickly.

The opportunities are real and the rewards are good. In addition to a competitive salary we offer a first rate pension and life assurance scheme and where appropriate, generous relocation expenses to an area of outstanding natural beauty.

Please apply giving precise details of experience, qualifications and salary to: Graham Shaw, Personnel Manager, K Shoemakers Ltd., Kendal, Cumbria LA9 7BT.

Water Injection Consultancy

OIL INDUSTRY

Oil Plus is the world's leading consultancy specialising in water injection technology for oil production. Part of a major UK public group, we operate worldwide from offices in the UK, Houston, Abu Dhabi and Singapore. Exciting growth and future prospects have created these challenging opportunities:

International Sales Executive

Based in the UK head office this position will initially cover a relatively established marketplace in Europe and Africa. In the longer term it is anticipated that the role will broaden to become one of a team operating worldwide. The successful candidate will probably be technically qualified with experience of selling engineering or technical consultancy services to the international oil industry. A knowledge of drilling, production systems, or water treatment would be advantageous but the essential requirements are a proven sales track record and a willingness to undertake extensive overseas travel.

Technologist — Water Injection Systems

The need is for a Chemist qualified to HNC or Degree level, ideally with experience of water injection systems or oilfield water analysis. The position will demand client presentations, site and laboratory based analytical work, water injection system start-up and operation and responsibility for control and administration of consultancy assignments. Although based at the company's UK offices the position will require visits of varied duration to oilfield locations throughout the world.

Contract Engineer

Financial Managers

Whitbread Finance Services

Following recent Company re-organisation, Whitbread Finance Services are restructuring their function and standardising accounting systems and working practices.

Finance Services will now be based upon Divisional Accounting Control Centres, using IBM computers to provide both Statutory Accounts and Management Information for Whitbread Breweries, Inns, Services and Trading Divisions.

This re-organisation has created the following Financial Management opportunities for men and women at our Cheltenham, Luton and Sheffield Control Centres.

Deputy Accounting Manager — Cheltenham

The person appointed will control all national financial data to the Services Divisional Systems so that all statutory and management information can be provided as necessary. You should be 30+ and be able to motivate staff and operate to very high standards. An accounting qualification is essential.

Accounts Payable/Fixed Assets Manager — Cheltenham

You will control all supplier accounts relating to the Services Division using the M.S.A. accounts payable package and also, on a National basis, all financial information relating to the Services Divisional Fixed Assets using the F.A.S.C.I.A. package for assets reporting and an 'in house' system for capital reporting. You should be 25+ and able to motivate and operate to high standards and disciplines.

Trade Accounting Manager and Supervisor — Cheltenham and Sheffield

In order to support our Regional 'in house' Sales Invoicing System we require a manager at Sheffield and a Supervisor at Cheltenham. For both of these positions experience in a computerised sales accounts environment is essential.

Inns Accounts Manager — Luton

You will use a PPL general ledger package system to control and monitor the input to the Inns Division Database, ensuring that all accounting controls and relevant balance sheet control accounts are maintained. A good manager is required who can communicate effectively at all levels of the business.

Accountancy Assistant — Sheffield

You will assist in the preparation of the Finance Services Budgets, Costs and Management information. You will also help develop and use Personal Computing methods which interface with mainframe systems. This position would suit a partially qualified accountant.

As well as excellent salaries we offer company benefits which include BUPA membership, an employee share scheme and 25 days holiday.

Please write with full career details to Mr. P. W. Clark, Finance Services Manager, Whitbread & Co. plc., Whitbread House, Park Street West, Luton LU1 3BG.

Sub-Contract Management

Capital Projects

GEC Turbine Generators is a world leader in the design, development and manufacture of advanced steam turbine generators, and the supply of complete power stations.

Comprehensive capital projects are managed by the company's Power Station Projects division which is responsible for a number of multi-million pound contracts in various parts of the world.

Expansion has created further opportunities for purchasing and commercial engineers to join the Division at its Headquarters in Rugby.

There are vacancies for mechanical and electrical engineers who will take full commercial responsibility for the management of substantial sub-contracts from start to final delivery. The company's policy is to sub-contract complete systems wherever possible, rather than order individual items. Thus, project management skills — the ability to liaise effectively with and influence other company departments and sub-contractors — are essential.

Highly motivated and ambitious engineers (male or female) of graduate calibre, who have proven experience in a commercial role within a capital project engineering environment, are needed.

Competitive salaries, together with the employee benefits associated with a large company, are offered and assistance with relocation costs is available where appropriate. Please write with full c.v. to Mr. A. M. Brown, Director and General Manager, Power Station Projects Division, GEC Turbine Generators Limited, Willans Works, Newbold Road, Rugby, Warwicks CV21 2NH.

Divisional Manager

c.£25,000 + 2.3 litre car — Northern England

As the UK subsidiary of an international high quality capital equipment manufacturer, our client has experienced a healthy growth rate since their establishment 10 years ago and currently enjoys a £50-million turnover.

They now need to appoint a Divisional Manager to head up their Northern Division, one of three semi autonomous geographical regions concerned with the sales, marketing and servicing of their range of market leading products.

Based in Leeds and reporting directly to the UK Sales Director, your brief will be to assume complete management and profit responsibility for the region which has a sales and servicing team of around 60 people. In particular, you will be required to give substantial support and back-up to the sales team.

Aged between 35 and 45, your senior line management experience in a sales/service oriented organisation, combined with your well developed range of management skills will qualify you for this challenging appointment.

Our client is offering a package which will guarantee minimum first year earnings of £25,000 and include a 2.3 litre car and attractive benefits. Growth potential within the division, when realised under your motivational and management leadership, can from there on bring you in excess of £30,000 per annum. Relocation expenses are available if required.

Interested men and women should write with full career details to Confidential Reply Service, Ref. ABD 9153, Austin Knight Advertising Limited, London W1A 1DS.

Applications are forwarded to the client concerned, therefore companies in which you are not interested should be listed in a covering letter to the Confidential Reply Supervisor.

Applications for both the above positions are sought from graduates (male or female) in Chemistry or Metallurgy who have several years' experience in electroplating research or production.

Please telephone or write, enclosing a full c.v. to: B. H. Paine, Personnel Services Manager, The Glacier Metal Company Limited, Ealing Road, Alperton, Wembley, Middlesex HA0 1HD. Tel: 01-997 6611.

GLACIER

An Associated Engineering Group Company

Our future looks good.... how about yours?

Sales Representative: South East England

As a soundly-based, forward looking member of the Delta Group, we are confident of a successful future and are looking for sales professionals with confidence in their own ability to develop their career within a growing organisation. A major force in our field – the manufacture of non-ferrous metals – our market sectors include electrical, building, precision machined parts and stockholding.

Your job will be to work closely with our Area Sales Manager, selling to existing customers and actively pursuing new accounts throughout our South Eastern sales territory.

Aged between 25-35 with a successful sales track record, you'll need the initiative and drive to create orders from opportunities. Experience in the brass industry although not essential would be an added advantage.

In addition to an attractive salary, bonus, company car and relocation expenses (if applicable) you can also expect opportunity for career progression within one of the U.K.'s largest group of companies.

If you share our confidence in the future and can prove you've the ambition and determination to succeed, we'll place our confidence in you.

DELTA

Project, Design, Quality and Production Engineers.

Join a team in pursuit of excellence.

There's a special skill in producing domestic appliances that are both easy to use and easy on the eye.

At TI Domestic Appliances, it's a skill we have in abundance.

And we use it to considerable effect in designing and manufacturing products ranging from central heating to highly functional, elegant hollow-ware.

But we recognise that, in our business, we simply can't afford to mark time.

Which is why we're making a major investment in men and women whose creative engineering ability and shrewd commercial awareness will give our new products the looks and the performance, the style and the quality that consumers have come to expect from anything which carries one of our brand names.

If you're the kind of man or woman we're looking for, we expect that you'll be familiar with consumer products engineering already.

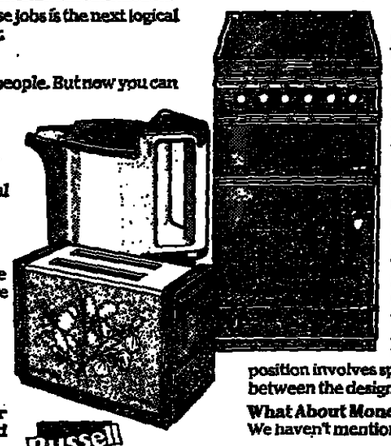
Even so, you'll find the hands-on involvement, the stimulus of short lead times, the close collaboration with marketing people and the sheer challenge of creating products that live up to our name all add up to an environment where you can work to maximum effect, and with maximum satisfaction.

And you'll probably find that one of these jobs is the next logical career step that you've been looking for.

Project Managers
You're already running a section of 2-3 people. But now you can step into a job that puts you in control of the work of a larger design and development team working from broadest concepts to finished products. You'll probably be in your late 20's, or early 30's with a finely honed commercial and managerial sense.

Design/Development Engineers
Originality and a truly creative engineering approach that's much more than merely cosmetic is the big challenge in this job, which is concerned mainly with heating and cooking products.

Quality and Reliability Engineers
Working mainly on either smaller electrical products, or gas appliances (where you will need sheet metal and/or machining experience), your task would be to make sure that our traditional standards sacrifice nothing to tight lead times.



Electrical/Electronics Engineer
With around 2-3 years' experience in electronic controls, you'd have the opportunity to create truly novel solutions to control problems – and some equally novel product features.

Product Designers and Design Draughting
With experience in electrical work. Working closely with a team of industrial designers, you'd face the challenge of turning some very original design concepts into engineering features that can be manufactured to the tightest cost and quality constraints.

Production Engineers
It's a high volume environment making the most of new technology. Working in a team, you'd be up against short lead times with just about every project. One position involves specific responsibility for effective liaison between the design and manufacturing functions.

What About Money?
We haven't mentioned specific salaries because our prime objective is to attract people up to a quality, not down to a price. All we'll say is that if you meet our demands we can probably meet yours.

Because we're recruiting right across the board, we could probably offer you a choice of locations – Stoke-on-Trent, Belper in Derbyshire, or Warrington. And we'll offer you relocation expenses that will help you to settle in quickly and painlessly.

If you possess a degree or HNC as well as relevant experience, and you're impatient to learn more, put in a call.

between 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. today, or up to 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Alternatively, please write with brief personal and career details, quoting reference TI 241, to: Austin Knight Selection, London W1A 1DS. Applications will be forwarded unopened; interviews will be held locally.

9 out of 10 of the UK's top companies have installed White Group security systems.

We now require additional experienced, professional sales personnel to maintain our continued growth.

The successful applicants will have a proven track record in selling capital equipment in a highly competitive market place and will probably be between 25-35 years of age.

A high level of self motivation and discipline is essential to meet the requirements of this demanding position.

Salaries for the high level of commitment will be a very substantial basic salary together with a realistic commission structure.

The right people for these positions will earn in excess of 20K per annum and will receive a range of large company benefits, including a company car.

If you believe you meet our exacting criteria and would like to join our dynamic team, then write or telephone

Sellafield is a recognised world centre for nuclear fuel reprocessing and has undergone a significant growth programme in recent years. We are now looking for Operations and Engineering personnel to support major new high technology plant.

Applicants should be aged between 24 and 30 and have a good honours degree in either Mechanical Engineering, Instrument/Control Engineering or Chemical Engineering. Membership of the appropriate Institution would be an advantage.

Applicants should ideally be employed in, or have substantial post-graduate experience in petro-chemical or heavy chemical process industries. Applicants for the engineering posts should have held a first position of responsibility preferably with experience of commissioning or plant maintenance. Instrument/Controls Engineers should have experience of complex "state-of-art" process control systems. Operations personnel should have practical experience of large capital plant operations in an industry where plant safety is well defined. For all areas some staff-management experience would be useful.

An initial salary package of around £9,000 rising to £10,500 is offered. Additional benefits include an excellent contributory superannuation scheme, generous relocation allowances and other conditions of service appropriate to a major company.

Applications are invited from suitably qualified men and women who should write or telephone for an application form to Mrs. L. J. Holman, British Nuclear Fuels plc, FREEPOST, Employment Centre, Sellafield, Seascale, Cumbria CA20 1PG or telephone Seascale 27724 (24 hour answerphone).

Management Training Specialist

Herts — to £14,000

"a practical approach to a perennial problem"

A leading pharmaceutical company firmly committed to 'people development', our client is entering a period of sustained business growth. A testing time undoubtedly, in which the Training function must play its part.

With responsibility in the area of Training and Manpower development, your brief will involve three main areas. Firstly, a 'selling' role, where you'll promote the training need to line management, research scientists and technical staff alike – no easy task, and one which will test your interpersonal skills to the full. Secondly, you'll identify training needs, design and implement programmes and develop individuals to realise their true potential. Thirdly, you'll closely monitor the effectiveness of development programmes in accordance with commercial and strategic objectives.

This is a demanding role requiring a wide range of skills. A graduate (ideally in Behavioural Sciences) now in your late 20's/early 30's you'll have a strong background in personnel and training. A knowledge of psychometric testing and counselling is very important as is the ability to sell your ideas to management. Last but by no means least you'll see this role as a stepping stone in your own career development.

Group Financial Control

SUSSEX COAST — c £15,000 + bonus

Our Client, a highly successful £50 million turnover Group, operates in the specialist area of sales and distribution of building products and services. A number of additional businesses provide essential support to both Group Companies and third parties.

The Group Financial Manager, who is also a main Board Director, wishes to appoint an Accountant who will play a leading role in the development of accounting policy and practice. The Group philosophy is to encourage flair and creativity in business managers rather than restrict it with rigid control systems. Particular areas of involvement will include budgeting and forecasting, cash management and the preparation and interpretation of Group accounts.

Applicants aged 40-50, must be qualified accountants with wide experience of financial mangement. The ability to gain the confidence of Directors and make a significant contribution to policy in a progressive multi site/multi business environment is essential.

REWARDS: Salary is for discussion c £15,000. Benefits include a substantial performance related bonus, pension scheme, BUPA and assistance with relocation where necessary.

Manager – Process Engineering

A highly qualified, highly motivated engineer to grow with us.

Up to £18,000+car+relocation. West London

BOC Limited is the UK and European operating division of the BOC Group, which is a world leader in the production of industrial gases and has major interests in other manufacturing and specialist distribution.

We pride ourselves on being at the leading edge of developing process plant technology and a major programme of capital investment is due to commence in 1985. Due to internal promotion we now wish to appoint a highly motivated Manager Process Engineering who will take an active role in implementing this programme.

This is a senior post leading a small team of professional engineers requiring total involvement and reporting to the General Manager Engineering.

We would expect you to be in your early 30's, a graduate and Chartered Chemical Engineer with a successful record in a similar capacity covering the following disciplines: Cryogenics, Distillation, Heat Exchange, Absorption, Hydrogen, Acetylene, Nitrous Oxide Production, Gas Compressors and Expanders, and the full spectrum of Process Plant commissioning, performance, evaluation and trouble shooting.

You must have the ability to influence and command respect, you will need to be a good negotiator conducting technical negotiations with contractors and making regular contact with process plant operational management. Although this position is based at Head Office in West London, you must be prepared for considerable UK travel to BOC plants and occasionally overseas.

Naturally for a position of this calibre you can expect an excellent salary up to £18,000, plus car and relocation expenses if appropriate. Career prospects are outstanding in a company that recognises and rewards ability.

If you feel you can measure up to this demanding specification, please write with full CV to: Brendan Keelan,
Personnel Manager,

As one of the world's leading car rental companies, standards at Avis are of the highest. Our success has brought us travel industry and business renter awards naming Avis as 'Best Car Rental Company 1984', and have led to our current need for additional Sales Executives. These positions are of particular importance to us, an ambitious, forward-looking organisation determined to increase still further our share of the market.

Our requirement is for top calibre professionals with both experience and personality. We are looking for at least 2 years' proven sales ability, preferably with a 'blue chip' company. You will be used to selling at all levels and have a confident, articulate manner with a strong structured approach to selling. You will also need the determination to develop existing accounts and identify new areas of business in commerce, industry and the travel trade. We will provide full product training.

In return we are offering a starting salary depending on experience in the range of £8,500–£10,000 plus a comprehensive range of benefits which includes non-contributory pension scheme, BUPA and a quality 1.6 litre company car.

DO YOU WANT TO ENSURE HIGH QUALITY COMPONENTS ARE INCORPORATED IN BRITISH AND EUROPEAN ENGINEERING PROJECTS?

The IEC group, 100 employees, turnover £4m+, has built its reputation on identifying and applying high performance mechanical components, for example:

- increasing life of ships' rudder bearings by a factor of 4.
- springs operating reliably in sea water in North Sea Oil Field pumps.
- bearings supporting shafts running up to 100 feet/sec with 10 microns clearance in high speed locomotive power-units.

Initially you will concentrate on acquiring specialised knowledge about the products and then have increasing involvement in the application, publicising, promoting and selling of these types of component.

The key requirement is your desire to develop expertise in identifying wider uses of current components and the need for new components which will satisfy increasingly stringent and competitive markets.

Mechanical engineering qualifications, design office or sales experience are other relevant factors. You will be based in Poole with increasing opportunities to travel in the U.K. and Europe.

Salary according to experience and additional benefits include Volvo 244, profit-sharing, BUPA, cost of living reviews and pension.

OWNERS ACCEPT FIXTURE LOSS —FOR MOMENT

By HOTSPUR

FROST continues to restrict racing's resumption, bringing about the jumping season's 50th cancellation, at Newcastle, yesterday and threatening today's Huntingdon meeting. But owners as a group will not press for extra fixtures unless the situation deteriorates significantly.

John Biggs, director-general of the Racehorse Owners' Association, said yesterday: "We generally reckon to lose an average of between 65 and 75 meetings each jumping season, so we don't plan to look for replacements at the moment."

Biggs added that his members would become more anxious if meetings were lost in the run-up to Cheltenham.

"The bad weather came at the right time for many horses," he said. "It's a quiet time of year when several are having a break. The time to worry will be if trainers can't get on to the gallops or find races to prepare their Cheltenham runners."

Biggs points out that his association members may be asked to consider the position if the situation worsened.

The last time supplementary meetings were introduced was in 1982, when 29 consecutive fixtures were called off in the fortnight after Dec. 8, and from that date to the end of the month only five of the 49 scheduled cards survived. Bad weather returned between Jan. 7-19, when only two meetings from an intended 25 were staged.

Since then 30 additional meetings a year have been built into the fixture list by the Jockey Club programme planners.

Withdrawal of Mr Meeka and Miss Silca Key, the two top weights, at the first acceptance stage on the William Hill Lincoln Handicap ensures that the weights will be raised at least 11lb for the Doncaster race on March 23. Miss Saint-Cloud now heads the handicap.

Saturday's Doncaster meeting features Last Deal's attempt to extend his unbeaten career record to nine in the William Hill Yorkshire Handicap 'Chase, but his trainer, Monica Dickinson, has added spice to the occasion by deciding to let Badsworth Boy carry top weight in the Mansion House Handicap 'Chase.

See You Then, Desert Orchid and Amarach, the leading three in the Schweppes Gold Trophy handicap, are absent from the 51 first acceptors, leaving Robin Wonder on top weight of 11st 10lb. Peter Easterby has taken out Benfen and Spritebrand, both prominent in ante-post betting, to leave Jobroke as his sole acceptor.

Robert Sangster and his Australian trainer Colin Hayes have paid a New Zealand record $650,000 (£272,000) for a yearling brother to Gurner's Lane, winner of the 1982 Melbourne Cup—a far cry from the £168 which Dave Davis is said to have paid for Phar Lap, winner of the race in 1930 and due to be commemorated at Chepstow on March 9.

The incongruity of an Australian Flat racehorse, who became a legend in his native country and died of poisoning in the United States, having a £3,000 handicap 'chase named after him is explained by the release of Phar Lap, the film about him in London's West End.

The film, the most expensive made in Australia, has the promotional backing of Corals the bookmakers, who might not want to be too closely associated with the actions of those bookmakers who stood to lose heavily by the colt's success in the 1930 Melbourne race and attempted to prevent it.

Overcoming a stilted start, the film feaures brilliant camera-work and all the emotions in the producers' handbook. It will appeal to those who follow racing but may never have heard about Phar Lap, though its more general popularity is harder to assess.

Lads' entry adds to Mordaunt task

By DANIEL COUPLAND

CHRISTOPHER MORDAUNT, the Jockey Club handicapper responsible for 'chasers, has been given an unexpected headache with the appearance of Wayward Lad and Ballinacurra Lad among yesterday's published 100 entries for the Seagram Grand National at Aintree on March 30.

With less than a fortnight to frame the weights, which are due out next Wednesday, Jenny Pitman, trainer of guaranteed top-weight Burrough Hill Lad, was critical that the onus should rest on one man's shoulders.

"It should be done by at least two people," said Mrs Pitman yesterday. "With the amount of prize money at stake and the prestige that goes with it, it's too much for one man.

"After all, even the experts can't agree on what weight Burrough Hill Lad should get. From what I've been reading in the past week their opinions have differed from 12st to 13st 5lb."

Gruelling race

"To give a horse more than 12st in a race as gruelling as the National with those fences to jump would be cruel," she added. "If something were to happen to Burrough Hill Lad early on in the Gold Cup I would like to run him, but if he is given more than 12st then I'll have to think again."

With her Gold Cup winner sure to head the weights, Mrs Pitman's other entry Corbiere, winner of the National in 1983 and third last year, should have at least another six above him in the weights, judged on current handicap ratings.

"I would be happy with 11st 4lb for Corbiere," said Mrs Pitman, who plans to give him three more races before Liverpool. "After all there are a lot of class horses entered and he is approaching the twilight of his career."

Ladbrokes have Corbiere at 10-1, with Burrough Hill Lad at 8-1 with a run. Corals go 14-1 Corbiere but do not quote Burrough Hill Lad.

Ballinacurra Lad is also missing from bookmakers' prices, as is Wayward Lad, whom Monica Dickinson does not regard as a National horse. "I was left a message by his joint-owner Mr Abbot to enter him, otherwise I would never of dreamt of it," Mrs Dickinson said last night.

EXILES BACK IN BRITAIN FOR GOOD

By PHIL LIGGETT

THE time when Britain's leading riders were forced into exile in France, Belgium, Italy or Holland to earn a living as professional riders may have past.

Yesterday, there was an almost unheard of about-face when Graham Jones and John Herety, who between them have ridden in all the world's most famous races, returned home permanently from France to join the Ever Ready-Marlboro Cycles team.

Jones, 27, who turned professional in 1979 and finished 20th in the Tour de France in 1981—the third highest placing by a Briton at the time—and Herety, who won the British road title on a flying visit in 1982, have both been attracted by the increased interest in the sport in Britain.

Jones said: "I've always kept a watch on racing here and I think I can earn as much money now as in France. I'll be under a lot of pressure because people will expect me to ride well, but we'll wait and see."

Places were lost

Both Jones and Herety lost their European places last season when their French teams disbanded, after both had shown poor form for most of the season because of injury or sickness.

Their return has boosted even further interest in professional racing, which, claimed promoter Alan Rushton yesterday, had 17 slots on television last summer.

Joining the two Manchester riders in the enlarged team are former international Gary Sadler, from Birmingham, and Steve Fleetwood (Liverpool), the only rider retained from last season's team.

STATE OF GOING
Advance official going for tomorrow's meetings: Wincanton, "good to soft"; Ayr, "ch," "good to soft," hdle (run on Flat course) "soft"; Doncaster, "soft—good to soft in straight."

None of the horses listed in Hotspur's Twelve to Follow is engaged today.

Course Notes & Hints

Down Flight is Best

By Our Course Correspondent

DOWN FLIGHT*, who has run well in two starts over jumps, may take advantage of an easier task in today's Finsbury Pavement Novices' Hurdle (Div. I—1.15) at Huntingdon.

This Run The Gauntlet horse, a useful stayer on the Flat, looked a rare bargain when sold out of Geoff Wragg's stable for 3,200gns at the Newmarket Autumn Sales.

He began his new career for Clive Holmes' stable by finishing fourth of 18 to Hunter River at Kelso in December and confirmed the promise when second to Celtic Flight over today's trip of two and a half miles at Cheltenham.

Pelion is fancied to foil the hat-trick attempt of Grundy Glow in the Northcote and Co. Handicap Hurdle (2.15).

Falkland Palace may reverse Boxing Day course and distance form with River Rhein in the Biomechanics Conditional Jockeys' Handicap 'Chase (1.45) and Duesenberg can take advantage of a 4lb concession by Play The Knave in the Optim Novices' 'Chase

Mosey, 70, recovers after shaky start

By ADRIAN FREDERICK in Durban

IN difficult conditions which he described as well suited to his game, Manchester's Ian Mosey scored a two under par 70 for a share of third position after the opening round of the Southern Sun African Open at Royal Durban yesterday.

Mosey was two strokes behind surprise leader Tertius Claassens while Gavin Levenson, who failed to make the final 36 holes in the P G A last week, was on 69.

Extremely coarse and bumpy greens — one player described them as being worse than Shredded Wheat — and thick rough lining the fairways combined with sweltering heat and a stiff breeze to make yesterday's round a test of patience and endurance.

Mosey said: "This is probably my best chance of the tour. I hit the ball straight and low and just got on with it on the greens which seems to be the way to face things here this week."

Ian Mosey . . . sank long birdie putts on the seventh and eighth greens.

He dropped two strokes in the first four holes but knocked in a birdie putt of 25 feet on the seventh and another (from 4) feet on the eighth to steady himself. Then he birdied three of the last five holes.

James recovers

Mark James also made a strong recovery on the difficult closing holes with four of his five birdies coming in the final seven holes. He had the best back nine of the day, 33, for a 71.

Andrew Chandler was less than complimentary about the state of the course, but picked up three birdies going out in 34. He failed to birdie either of the downwind par five holes and dropped a shot on the 500 yard 15th after driving into thick rough less than 10 feet off the fairway.

Chris Moody opened with two good shots to the front edge of the first hole and then took four putts. That was the end of him and he failed to sign his card after an 82. "I have decided to return home early and will miss the rest of the circuit," said the Brighton professional.

Ryder Cup player Paul Way was suffering from an injured hand and scored 81. He informed the organisers that it was unlikely he would be taking further part in the tournament.

Claassens, who finished runner-up in this tournament two years ago, had an amazing front nine of 31 but struggled on the way home.

RIVIERA TEST FOR NICKLAUS

By ALEX LANCASTER

JACK NICKLAUS challenges one of his "bogey courses," the 7,000-yard Riviera, in the £380,000 Los Angeles Open which starts today.

Nicklaus played his first round as a professional in 1962 on this course which is known as Hogan's Alley. Ben Hogan won three Los Angeles Opens on it from 1942 to 1948 as well as the U.S. Open in 1948.

But Nicklaus, though he thinks Riviera is "one of America's 10 best," has never won on it. Two years ago he finished runner-up here in the P G A Championship to Hal Sutton.

Stern test

Nicklaus may be unlucky again because there is a formidable field with Tom Watson opening his 1985 campaign. The five times British Open champion won this title in 1980 and again in 1982 and he represents a big threat to the defending champion Dave Edwards.

Greg Norman, too, makes his first appearance of the year. Like Nick Faldo, who is also playing and is in fine form, the Australian won for the first time in America last year taking the Canadian and Kemper Opens. "The great white shark" finished ninth on the money list with £280,000.

Faldo is joined here again by Bernhard Langer, Sandy Lyle, Ken Brown, and Peter Oosterhuis.

Riviera is a stern test by any standards. The greens are notoriously slick and fast while the fairways, mainly of strong African grass, are crossed by several deep ravines.

It is both a hitter's course and one that also needs great judgement and putting skill.

R & A TO SPONSOR WOMEN

By MICHAEL WILLIAMS

THE Royal and Ancient have come to the rescue of the Ladies Golf Union by sponsoring this year's British Womens' Open Championship which will now take place at Moor Park, Rickmansworth, during the first week of October.

It is an unprecedented and wholly admirable gesture by the R & A who will not only contribute the whole of the £40,000 prize money but will also bear the administrative and running costs.

The rescue operation is not on a long-term basis, but a purely interim measure to tide the L G U over while they continue their search for commercial sponsorship which they lost last year when Hitachi withdrew after one season at Woburn.

Prize money then was as high as £160,000 and the Japanese company's decision to pull out was caused purely by the B B C's decision not to televise again this year after slow play and a runaway victory by Ayako Okamoto had caused disenchantment.

Advice asked

There was consequently the grave probability that the Women's Open would not be played this year, as was also the case in 1983 but when the L G U asked to meet Michael Bonallack, secretary of the R & A, and Gordon Jeffrey, chairman of the Championship Committee last month, it was for advice more than anything.

When the R & A made their offer of sponsorship, believing it was important to maintain the championship's continuity, it caught the L G U completely by surprise and, not surprisingly, was welcomed with open arms.

The experience the R & A have in running the Open Championship, now one of the great occasions in the world sporting calender — will be invaluable in putting the Women's Open on a sound footing. Committee members, scoreboards and equipment will all be put at the L G U's disposal.

Temporarily, at least, the championship will be similar to the American Women's Open which has always come under the jurisdiction of the United States Golf Association, the equivalent of the R & A.

U.S. competitors

John Laupheimer, Commissioner of the American L P G A Tour, was enthusiastic when he heard the news and thought that perhaps four of the leading U.S. women golfers would compete at Moor Park where a composite of the High and West courses will be used.

Mr Bonallack said the R & A would also be available for advice in the setting of tee markers which, at Woburn last year, were considered to be too severe for the comparatively late date in the season.

BUTLER STUNS CHINESE

By A Special Correspondent in Kiryu, Japan

STEVE BUTLER, 21, produced a surprise win aginst Zhang Qian, of China, in the second round of the Japanese Open in Kiryu yesterday.

It was Butler's biggest win since the one over world champion Icuk Sugiarto in England's Thomas Cup bronze medal success seven months ago.

Butler, from Coventry, yesterday beat the man who two months ago in Woking beat him in the England v China match, and the score was 17-15, 18-14 in this the third tournament of the Pro-Kennex World Grand Prix.

Butler is well know for the speed at which he likes to play and he managed to produce a pace at which Zhang Qian found hard to live.

Chinese strength

The defeat was the only one upon the squad of Chinese mens' singles players. Five of the others reached the last 16, and two caused major upsets.

Yang Guanli, a left-hander, won 15-5, 15-11 against Luis Pongoh, the Indonesian who won last week's Takei tournament, and Ding Qiqing, another left-hander, beat Indonesian Liem Swie King by 15-11, 6-15, 15-10.

Ding's win denied Butler the chance today to play Liem, his boyhood idol, and now he may never get another chance because Indonesian team leaders are trying to persuade the great man to give up singles and concentrate on doubles.

FIRST ROUND. — Foo Kok Keong (Malaysia) bt S. Matsuura 15-10, 15-10; Yang Gianli (China) bt I. Helledie (Denmark) 15-1, 15-5; T. Inoue bt M. Butler (Canada) 15-6, 15-5; S. Thongsdr (Thailand) bt Sombol Kukasemkij (Thailand) 9-15, 17-14, 15-13.

COWDELL NEXT IN LINE

Frank Warren, the promoter, is hoping to clinch what could be his fourth world title fight in as many months when he goes to the Riva De Garda, Italy, at the weekend, write Ken Mays.

He will watch Rocky Lockridge defend the W B A super-featherweight title and then hopes to sign the American to meet Pat Cowdell, the European champion, at Birmingham in May.

Warren, who staged the Don Currey-Colin Jones fight on Saturday, has Charlie Magri challenging Sot Chitalada for the W B A flyweight title next month and has almost completed plans for a light-welterweight chance for Terry Marsh against Gene Hatcher in April.

Meanwhile, Errol Christie, who took three rounds to stop Mexican Gonzalo Montes last week, has been matched with Nestor Flores, of Panama, at the Dolphin Centre, Darlington, on Feb. 2. Keith Wallace, who has not fought since June, is also on the bill.

CHALLENGE FOR BURTON

By BILL JOHNSON in Hongkong

MAXINE BURTON, from Surrey, is included in a strong international field of women professionals who line up in the 54-hole Thai International Hongkong Open, which begins at the Royal Hongkong club today.

It is the first women's professional tournament to be played in Hongkong since the Far East Open—then part of the United States women's tour — was held eight years ago. This year it launches the £150,000 women's Asia golf circuit.

The circuit comprises five tournaments moving in turn to Bangkok, Johor for the Malaysian Open, Singapore and finally the Indonesian Open in Jakarta on Feb. 22-24.

Spanish success

An otherwise unrewarding 1984 ended on a high note for Miss Burton when she captured the Spanish Open title at La Manga last October.

It was Miss Burton's second victory on the European tour. "Winning in Spain has improved my attitude," she says.

"While I am not overflowing with confidence I do feel that, given a good start, I can do well over the next few weeks."

Set out in gently rolling wooded hills the 5,490-yard Eden course, within sight of mainland China, is not overlong, though strategically placed water hazards will doubtless pose their own problems.

There is a strong Japanese contingent of 16 professionals who are using the Asia circuit as a warm-up for their own lucrative tour where the 1984 leading money winner To Ai-Yu banked a cool £190,000 for her efforts.

Sponsorship crisis for international squad

By GEOFFREY PAGE

PLANS for the development of Britain's international rowing squad have reached a critical stage, and once again the decisive factor may be lack of money.

Despite an Olympic Gold and 12 other world and Olympic medals collected by British oarsmen during the eight years' generous sponsorship by Nat-West Bank, no new sponsor has been found to take over.

Without commercial or private backers, whatever Government or Sports Council assistance might be forthcoming, the A R A cannot ensure adequate training for their squad.

Like other minority and totally amateur sports, rowing's success has outstripped its means. Though Britain have often ranked among the top four or five nations in the rowing world in recent years, the sport is not self-sufficient at top level.

Commenting on the problems yesterday, Nigel Graham, chairman of the A R A's international rowing committee, said: "With the Government squeeze on the expenditure of public money the situation is likely to get worse rather than better.

Programme threat

"Our situation is desperate. Unless massive financial support is forthcoming the programme for the various international squads may have to be seriously curtailed compared with those in recent years.

"The original policy statement last autumn, sent out to all potential squad members, warned that the summer overseas regatta programme might have to be restricted to one regatta, such as Lucerne, and the world championships.

"Even this programme could land us into running our budget into a deficit. Only one regatta before the world championships is not sufficient to prepare fully for the international standard, but it would be irresponsible to try for more without the necessary funds."

Next year, with the world championships being held in Nottingham, and presumably with more television coverage than usual, it may be easier to find a sponsor. Meanwhile, despite recent successes, British rowing remains a Cinderella sport.

BIG THREAT TO SPORTS

By PAT BESFORD

THE Central Council of Physical Recreation, fighting to stop sports grounds being sold for commercial purposes, have announced that nearly 700 separate facilities in England and Wales are in danger.

Peter Lawson, general secretary of the CCPR, said yesterday: "The problem, involving areas owned by local authorities, schools and national and private industry, is reaching endemic proportions.

"There are 48 school playing fields, in whole or in part, which are to go under the hammer in Nottinghamshire alone.

"To highlight what is happening, the Birmingham Amateur Football League has stopped admitting new teams because of lack of pitches."

The figures are based on data in the Land Register, published by the Department of the Environment as at January, 1983 and updated by information that his flooded into the Council in recent months.

BREW MISSES SPEEDO TRIP

Paul Brew, 19, the promising younger brother of Olympic team captain Robin Brew, has pulled out of the Scottish team for the 21-nation Speedo meeting in Amersfoort, Holland this weekend.

Brew, who trained with his father at Kelly College, Tavistock, has a heavy chest cold and is likely to also miss the Diana meeting in Paris on Feb. 1-3.

WHITEHEAD RULED OUT

Lance Whitehead, 29, the R A F champion who was injured in practice on Tuesday, will take no further part in the world bobsleigh four-man championships in Cervinia, Italy.

He was still suffering from concussion and double vision yesterday but is confident of recovering in time to represent the R A F in next month's British Inter-Service Championships in Winterberg.

British champion Nick Phipps, 32, experimented yesterday with a different set of runners while the East Germans, Swiss and Italians were involved in race-offs to decide which one would be dropped for Saturday's competition.

Fourth One-Day International

MOXON MAKES FINE DEBUT BUT ENGLAND LOSE

By MICHAEL CAREY in Nagpur

INDIA, already three down in the series, defeated England by three wickets in their one-day international in Nagpur yesterday—their first success in 12 one-day affairs since winning the World Cup in 1983.

Their stuttering performance in eventually getting home with 14 balls to spare was a reminder of the importance of the winning habit to any team, because India had much more in hand earlier after an important toss had enabled them to restrict England to 240 for seven from 50 overs.

Contrasting half-centuries by Kapil Dev and Gavaskar, the one violent the other carefully paced, then took India to a point where, with only 75 required from 20 overs and six wickets in hand, no more extravagance was needed.

Both got themselves out, however, and though England's hopes were still slender, if Viswanath had been caught with 30 still required, eight wickets would have been down and there were signs that India's nerves would not have survived the remaining nine overs.

In the end, England squeezed them tighter than they could have dared hope, especially when their bowlers were operating in a temperature of around 95 degrees and on a pitch which lent itself to stroke play more than it had earlier.

Vigorous Cowdrey

At that stage England not only had to work much harder for their runs but overcome the cheap loss of Gatting and Gower and their total owed much to Cowdrey's vigorous 46 from 42 balls which enabled them to make 75 priceless runs from their last 10 overs.

The ground was under water 48 hours earlier, so it was no surprise that Gavaskar, after his first success with the coin in the series, preferred to let England try their luck on a pitch where the ball did not come on to the bat initially, while the outfield was inevitably slow, until the burning sun had its effect on both.

So avoiding the loss of early wickets through attempting too much too soon was all-important and Fowler and Moxon did well to make 70 together in 21 overs, aided by the left-hander's eventual willingness to give an uncomplicated thump over the top to anything over-pitched.

He was bowled driving inside a ball from Shastri, but Moxon, looking composed and correct on his first appearance at this level, could scarcely have done more, first finding that the well-timed stroke at length would reach the boundary and later finding scope to hit the spinners over the top.

Before this was required, he had seen Gatting pay the price of over-ambition and Gower caught and bowled, though Lamb once drove Patel out of the ground before, incommoded by a knee injury that required the services of a runner, he ventured down the pitch to attack Shastri and missed.

By then Moxon had been dropped in the deep at 45 and 58. But that's life (or lives) in one-day cricket and he looked very much at home before hooking Kapil into deep square leg's hands after facing 151 balls and hitting seven fours.

Cowdrey then improvised with much brilliance and no little power, not least in making room to hit Kapil for six over cover with a memorable flat-batted stroke which, coupled with some scorching cuts, ensured England would have something to bowl at.

Their start was deceptively encouraging, with India reducing themselves to 31 for three and, in quick succession, Rajput (to his first ball), Srikkanth and Vengsarkar all failed to appreciate that unseemly haste was not necessary.

Azharuddin and Gavaskar restored India's fortunes, not least by their appreciation of the need for the ones and twos, and Azharuddin, with more than 500 runs off the England attack already on this tour, was opening up menacingly with two sixes off Marks when Cowdrey brought one back to bowl him.

This brought together Kapil and Gavaskar, the central figures in India's recent chequered history, and a partnership of 76 in 11 overs followed, though not before Kapil had typically made an iffish start which must have given his captain apoplexy.

Early on, he just cleared cover off Edmonds, almost played on to Cowdrey and had made only 16 when he drove Edmonds high to the long-off boundary where Cowans, running round, got his hands to but could not hold a catch that was by no means impossible by his standards.

Leg before survived

Encouraged by that, Kapil, the man of the match, struck Cowdrey for two legside sixes in one over and when Cowans returned, lifted his first ball for a third which, coupled with other crisp strokes, took him to 54 from only 40 balls.

His captain then had a word with him, perhaps suggesting that quiet accumulation was all that was required, but Kapil still drilled the next ball into mid-on's hands and Gavaskar, at 54, survived a close lbw against Cowans before playing across a full length delivery from Agnew, to his undisguised annoyance.

India then needed 44 from 13 overs. Even Minor Counties (North) would not have jibbed at that, but Shastri's normal calm deserted him and if he had not escaped a steepling top edge off Agnew at nine, England might have made it improbably 4-0.

25 injured when Stand collapses

At least 25 people were injured, several seriously, when a bamboo stand near the Press box collapsed soon after the start of the one-day international in Nagpur.

More than 100 people were thrown to the ground when the structure gave way when only two overs had been bowled in England's innings. Police and volunteers helped to free trapped spectators.

Most of the injured had broken limbs, but several were carried away unconscious. The umpires restarted the game four minutes after the incident while rescue work was still in progress.

Wessels helps Australia regain pride

AUSTRALIA'S embattled cricketers restored their tattered credibility at Sydney yesterday with a three-wicket victory over Sri Lanka in a 50-overs World Series game.

The Australians bit 242 for seven wickets, passing Sri Lanka's total of 240 for six with 2·5 overs to spare.

A watchful 82 by man-of-the-match Kepler Wessels was the cornerstone of the home side's reply while his captain Allan Border's 57 answered his team's critics in thrilling fashion.

Border's men, labelled one-day nohopers after losing to Sri Lanka in Melbourne last Saturday, kept up with the required run rate despite losing two early wickets for 29.

Most successful

Border and Wessels had little difficulty with the Sri Lankan attack. They added 80, with Border hitting nine boundaries off 67 balls, before he was stumped off Somachandra de Silva.

His innings took him past former Australian captain Greg Chappell's tally of 2,331 runs to become his country's most successful one-day batsman.

Sri Lanka slumped to 55 for four before captain Duleep Mendis and Aravinda de Silva rescued them with a 159-run partnership, a Series record.

Australia's win puts them second in the competition with two wins from seven games. Sri Lanka, with one win in six matches, must win this weekend's two games against the West Indies and Australia to qualify for the final against the West Indies.

HAYNES IN A HURRY

DESMOND HAYNES lashed a fiery 86 as the West Indians cruised to an eight-wicket win over Australian Capital Territory (ACT) in a 50-overs match in Canberra yesterday.

The Australians scored a respectable 212 for two but the touring side proceeded to plunder the Territory bowling with ease and reached their target in just 132 minutes in the 37th over.

The home side began well with Peter Woods, top scorer with a solid 58, and his partner Ken Stone putting on 100 before Woods was bowled by Eldine Baptiste. Stone hit 39 while Ken Norris struck a forceful 49 not out at number three.

Thelston Payne and Richie Richardson opened for the West Indies and Richardson's dismissal for 22 led to the arrival of Haynes, himself normally an opener.

Batting switch

Payne and Haynes built a century partnership in 65 minutes with Haynes hitting a six over long-on off leg-spinner Graham Bush, before switching to batting left-handed and hitting the spinner to the square leg boundary.

The ACT team included John Abrahams, captain of English county side Lancashire when Clive Lloyd has been on tour, who bowled seven controlled overs of off-spin for 30 runs.

Bush eventually had his revenge having Haynes caught, but Payne, with 67 not out, and Gus Logie passed the ACT total.

COUNTIES WAIT ON INCREASE

Counties demanding a bigger share of Test match receipts are likely to be told a month before the new season if they will receive more money from this summer's Ashes series against Australia.

A working party was set up by the Test and County Cricket Board's finance committee last October to investigate the disquiet over the imbalance in cash distribution.

TCCB spokesman Peter Lush said "The working party has had a number of meetings—and there are more to come. It was clearly going to take quite a while to formulate any detailed recommendations. Hopefully their report will be ready in March."

Test grounds, who shoulder the financial burden of staging the games, received £250,000 each from last summer's series with West Indies, while the remaining counties got £70,000 less from the TCCB's surplus.

ALL TESTS TO BE FOUR DAYS

By RACHAEL FLINT

All women's Test matches will in future be of four days' duration, it was decided at a meeting of the International Women's Cricket Council (IWCC) in Melbourne yesterday.

The Women's Cricket Associations of Ireland and Denmark were admitted to the Council and join England, Australia, New Zealand, West Indies and India in the world organisation.

The Council meeting coincided with England's tour of Australia, in which four day Tests have been played and results achieved in two out of four to date, with a win to each.

In the previous eight series between the two countries, spanning 50 years, England have won five Tests, Australia three, and 15 have been drawn. There is general agreement that four-day Tests are more likely to see a result.

Future plans include tours to England by India in 1986, Australia in 1987, and the staging of the fourth World Cup in Australia in 1988.

Honorary membership of the I.W.C.C. was conferred on England's Norma Whitehorn for her 24 years service to the world governing body, during which she served as chairman, treasurer and president.

The England and Australian teams arrived in Bendigo yesterday and prepare for the fifth and final Test which starts tomorrow.

Noah's huge serve steals victory

By JOHN PARSONS in Philadelphia

YANNICK NOAH perilously saved four match points against Sandy Mayer when his comeback after seven months out of the tournament limelight began in earnest in the Ebel United States Pro Indoor Championships in Philadelphia.

It was a heartening way for the Frenchman to win, for it demonstrated that he has lost none of his resolve or ambition.

Even so, it was not until he was 2-5 in the final set that he at last began to establish authority on his serve.

After his 6-4, 3-7, 7-6 success over an opponent who has slipped to 117th in the world rankings, Noah spoke about how tough it is proving for him to regain the degree of form and fitness which made him French champion in 1983.

"For the first three weeks, when I started practising again, I felt I was a beginner," he said. "I couldn't move. I couldn't anticipate. I couldn't hit the ball soundly, and in fact I could hardly see the ball. What I need most of all now is more and more matches."

Mayer upset

Mayer was predictably upset at allowing four match points to escape. On the other hand, although much of the tennis was scrappy, the match points—one at 3-5, two at 4-5 and finally one at 5-6—were impressively saved by Noah, three of them with huge serves.

The most impressive display so far has come from Stefan Edberg, 19, the most versatile and agressive of the formidable pack of young Swedish players on the men's circuit.

Now coached solely by Tony Pickard, the former British Davis Cup player and team captain, Edberg crushed Boris Becker, the West German, 6-3, 6-1.

The watching Jimmy Connors, who will be Edberg's next opponent, providing he first overcomes Leif Shiras, must have been impressed.

'DISASTER' DAY FOR FULWOOD

By BILL EDWARDS

NICK FULWOOD, Britain's 11th ranking player, took a 6-0, 6-3 beating from Bruce Derlin of New Zealand then a lecture from Chris Bradnam, his coach in the Lawn Tennis Association's Satellite Circuit at Peterborough yesterday.

Disappointed Bradnam said: "This was a disaster. He failed to identify his opponent's weaknesses and so make the most of his own talents. This is one of the fundamental troubles with British players and the reason why they lag behind," said Bradnam.

Fulwood, who has just received a sponsorship from Systems 80, a Derby double-glazing firm to help gain international experience, admitted: "I was playing the points as they came without looking deeper."

Stuart Bale, a member of the King's Cup team, is the only home player in today's semi-finals. He beat Randy Vigmostad of United States 6-4, 6-2 in 61 minutes.

It was a solid performance but Robin Drysdale, the other British player in the quarter-finals, went down 6-7, 6-4, 6-4, to Menno Oosting of Holland who will now meet Bale for a place in the final.

TURNBULL HAS HARD FIGHT

Third-seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia was forced to a third set before beating newcomer Grace Kim 6-2, 7-6, 6-2 in the weather-plagued Virginia Slims of Florida tournament in Key Biscayne.

None of the top players lost but Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded No. 2, lost a battle with the record-breaking cold spell. For the second day running officials postponed all evening matches, including Lloyd's second-round encounter with Gigi Fernandez.

In other matches involving seeded players, the No. 9, Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden defeated Debbie Spence 6-2, 6-2 and No. 12 Bettina Bunge, toppled South African Rosalyn Fairbank 6-1, 6-3. Kathy Rinaldi beat Kathy Horvath 6-3, 6-2.

Budd all set for Decker clash

By KEN MAYS

ZOLA BUDD is all set for another encounter with American Mary Decker in the summer, but all memories of their catastrophe in the Los Angeles Olympics will be a thing of the past as far as the little South African born runner is concerned.

Miss Budd will run indoors for the first time in her life when she takes part in the Pearl Assurance national championships 1,500 metres at RAF Cosford tomorrow and Saturday.

But she will concentrate on the European grand prix circuit beginning in June and that is where she expects to again meet the American.

During a break in training at Birmingham's Holiday Inn she said: "I am looking forward to running big races and it will be the 3,000 metres where I expect to meet Mary again.

"But there will also be a lot of other girls in the races and Mary Decker is just another runner.

"What happened at the Olympics was taken out of proportion. The Decker incident is in the past and I am glad it is all over."

Miss Budd, 18, who will be running in Britain for the first time since July, paid her first visit to Cosford yesterday and said: "It felt like I had one leg longer than the other running round the steep bends."

With 15 runners entered in the 1,500 metres she will have to take part in the heats tomorrow and the final on Saturday for which there are still 1,000 tickets available.

After an experiment with spike shoes she has decided to run barefooted despite the hardness of the track. "But it will not affect my feet because it is not a long distance," she said.

Quick elevation

Running 75 miles of training each week, her ultimate aim is to move up to the 10,000 metres by the 1988 Olympics and then finish her career as a marathon runner.

Her final word on all the controversy surrounding her quick elevation to the British team for last year's Olympics was: "Looking back it may have been better if I had come to Britain in a non-Olympic year."

PARKER EXCELS IN DEFEAT

By JOHN MASON

England Schools (18 Group) 6pts
New Zealand Schools 12

NEW ZEALAND'S senior schoolboys, who return home today, completed a highly successful first tour of Britain and Ireland by beating England's 18-Group side by a goal and two penalty goals to two penalty goals at Twickenham yesterday.

In securing the 11th victory from 12 matches the New Zealanders reached 316 points, which included 51 tries. They conceded 52 points, only three teams managing to score tries against them.

While All Black rugby, plainly, has many competent hands, and feet, to service it in future seasons, yesterday's match was disappointing. The recent inactivity will not have helped though it was possible to see where and how Wales beat them last month.

Both teams yesterday were subjected to a rigorous examination by the referee, David Parry-Jones, much of which had accompanying New Zealand officials looking puzzled and unhappy in the committee box. Their dismay was understandable.

Sophisticated play

A penalty count of 26-10 in England's favour must explain a great deal because New Zealand, in most respects, were the more able team, particularly up front. There was power and sophistication in important positions and England's defensive schemes needed to work well.

Parker, England's full-back, had a distinguished match and need waste no sleep on account of four missed kicks at goal, all from long range. As it was he put over two penalties from 40 metres in the first 13 minutes to give England the lead.

Preston, New Zealand's talented scrum-half, whose opposite number, Kadooni, is only 16, followed with a penalty goal from short range after England, defending desperately, had fallen offside. He missed a second kick when England were penalised at a lineout.

The lineout and the ball on the ground were grey areas for the New Zealanders, who were too ready with tongues. Only rarely did their methods of winning possession satisfy the requirements of Mr Parry-Jones.

Dorgan prominent

New Zealand's try was scored by Mawhinney, the No. 8, following a scrum close to England's line. The hard-running Dorgan, left wing, had set up the position and Preston, who kicked a second penalty goal, converted from the touchline.

The second penalty goal followed a strong run by Clavis on the right and he appeared to score in the South West corner. The referee was unsighted, awarded New Zealand a scrum five metres out and, obligingly, England were offside as the opposition heeled.

STOCKWOOD EYE CUP

By MICHAEL AUSTIN

Stockwood Park, Luton-based and winners of the Bedfordshire Cup a record six times, are setting sights on a John Player Cup place a decade after their previous appearance, when they lost 12-0 at Morpeth.

Park, with four players remaining, remarkably, from their most famous cup team, need to win two games to qualify again, beginning with the East Midlands semi-final against Stewart and Lloyds at Luton on Feb. 3.

"We have an age range of 19 to 40 in our team," said Mark Lovell, Park's captain and tight-head prop. "Rex Poulter, our No. 8, and fixtures secretary, is the elder statesman, and John Humphreys, our cup captain 10 years ago, an evergreen outside-half.

"Other survivors from that side are David Budge, a utility back, and Howard Parsons, a flanker," added Lovell, who has followed in the studmarks of his father, George, a Park tight-head prop for 20 years.

Coaching benefits

Park's young players are benefiting from cosmopolitan coaches. Peter Burke, a former London Irish prop, and John Howells, who played fullback for Llanelli and London Welsh, have helped Park through what Lovell described as "the toughest fixture list in the East Midlands."

While Park have regretted loss of match practice through frozen pitches, Dudley Kingswinford, a North Midlands club, have derived back-handed benefits with time to recover from a long injury list.

Ian Beddow, Jeremy Bill and Brian Platts, three backs, suffered facial injuries and Andrew Grosvenor, a wing, sustained a broken collarbone in the recent North Midlands Cup quarter-final, which Camp Hill won 9-7.

Derby, along with several other Derbyshire clubs, are concerned with the problem of disappearing coaches.

"We just cannot get one," said Tony Fry, Derby's secretary. "We need someone to administer the coaching side, or indeed, coach the first team."

Oxford subdued by big NZ pack

By DAVID GREEN

Oxford University 0, New Zealand Universities 18pts

THE New Zealand Universities started their 13-match tour, which will take them also to Ireland, Italy and France, with a comfortable victory over Oxford University at a chilly Iffley Road yesterday afternoon.

Oxford's cause was not helped by the departure of Hugo MacNeill, their Ireland fullback, who went off with a strained hamstring with the international against Scotland on Feb. 2 very much in mind.

But the New Zealand margin of a goal and four penalty goals to nothing was a fair reflection of their superiority, though they will be irked that, despite forward superiority in tight, loose and line-out, they could cross Oxford's line only once.

Oxford's tackling, to be sure, was brave and they covered grimly, but when allowance is made for this and for the change of climate, one felt that some of the New Zealand tactics were mistaken.

Their pack, a stone a man heavier than Oxford's, was also mobile. Keenan and Speight won plenty of line-out ball—though MacDonald and Welsh had their successes for Oxford—and Moffat had an outstanding game on the flank.

Powerful shove

So powerful was the New Zealand shove that Mr Hawthorne, not the slowest man with a whistle, had the option of penalising the visitors for pushing early on their own ball or penalising Oxford for delaying the put-in as their scrum motored backwards.

Hugo MacNeill . . . retired with hamstring injury.

Behind the New Zealand pack Kirk, their All-Black scrum-half, showed a rapid pass off either hand and he had a shrewd boot, but outside him things too often went wrong.

The New Zealanders relied, particularly in the first half, on miss moves in the centre undertaken at high speed. Most of these, either through fault, timing or mishandling, for which the cold was adequate excuse, came to nothing.

Pearson excels

A Sid Going perhaps would have used forward dominance to set up positions close to Oxford's line and then exploited the strength of McDowell and Saseve, a veritable battleship, on the short side.

As it was Oxford were given opportunities to counter-attack and Pearson, who performed wonders at the base of Oxford's defeated scrum, O'Brien, Rishton and Vessey, well supported by Reed and Phelps, all had good moments.

Turner opened the scoring after 20 minutes with a simple penalty when Pearson strayed offside at a scrum by Oxford's posts, a position gained by quick New Zealand handling and a formidable kick and chase by Saseve.

Continuous pressure

Continuous New Zealand pressure, relieved only by the occasional Oxford breakout, produced a second penalty by Turner when Phillips, trying to open up inside his own 22, was tackled and played the ball on the ground.

Within 10 minutes of the interval Turner had kicked his third and fourth penalties, both for offside offences. Oxford mounted one or two promising attacks, and from one of these the New Zealanders produced their solitary try.

MacDonald, Welsh and Marvin drove into the New Zealanders' 22 but lost the ruck. Kennedy, having fielded Gray's relieving kick, attempted to run the ball, but loose passing enabled Collinson to send Saseve charging in from 40 yards for Turner to convert.

Oxford University.—H. MacNeill (A. Kennedy, 50); S. Vessey, J. Rishton, T. O'Brien, L. Phillips; C. Evans, S. Pearson; D. Mills, J. Greenhalgh, A. Joyce, N. MacDonald, A. Welsh, R. Phelps, D. Reed, T. Marvin.

Hastings' Light Blues too quick for RAF

Cambridge Univ. ... 29pts RAF ... 6pts

A FAMILIAR concoction of back skills, individual and collective, projected Cambridge into the Lent Term with an invigorating performance in victory over the Royal Air Force on the lush, green acres of Grange Road yesterday, writes Michael Austin.

Fielding nine Blues and 12 players in all still available for next season, Cambridge thrived under the guidance of Hastings, the new captain, goalkicker and Scotland B fullback, who scored 13 points.

While Cambridge's forwards, featuring O'Leary and Morrison, played the high speed game of quick lineouts and the two-man variety to hustle the heavier airmen, the Light Blues' backs showed the visionary support play to outpace their opponents.

Perfect foil

Victory by three goals, two tries and a penalty goal to two penalty goals was the logical outcome. Even touches of class from Orwin, in the line-out, and from Underwood, in the cover tackle, failed to offer the RAF any hope of their first win in six games this season.

Simms, a third England player denied by the snow in Dublin last weekend, showed the silky acceleration and instinctive magnetism for the gap which stamps him an outstanding centre.

Clough, a fellow Lancastrian, revelled as the perfect foil for Simms. Clough, 6ft 1in and 14st, strode 80 yards, bustling past and through tacklers, for the game's prime try to point Cambridge towards a 12-6 lead at half-time.

Others followed remorselessly with the RAF thankful for Gigg's sound defence, for solid scrummaging bringing two heels against the head and for the neatness of Evans, the outside-half, who kicked their goals. Fashioning tries was another matter.

Hastings had begun Cambridge's scoring with a try, appropriately from a pass by Bailey, his predecessor as captain, who completed only his third match for the Light Blues this season without ill effects from a nagging foot injury, first suffered in South Africa last summer.

Clough added his second try, Simms pounced on Huxtable's fumble for another and Pierce scored the last when Coptcoale failed to touch down an impish, rolling ball. Cambridge were well pleased with victory and with their new captain.

Gloucester worried by merit muddle

By MICHAEL AUSTIN

GLOUCESTER, only two days before launching their John Player Cup campaign against Richmond at Kingsholm, are already deeply concerned about their chances of qualifying for next season's competition.

Their fears are well justified because they stand at the foot of the anomolous, seven-club South and Southwest Merit Table, the vehicle for Cup entry, with a melancholy record of played two, lost two.

Prospects of Gloucester winning a place in next season's Cup competition hinge on their winning at least two of their remaining three merit games—at Bristol on Feb. 1, against Bath at Kingsholm on Feb. 9, and at Exeter on April 27.

The top five clubs qualify but unlike other divisional merit tables two matches, not one, between clubs can count so Gloucester are paying for their loyalty to traditional opponents and consequent neglect of Cornish fixtures which they would probably win.

Treasured fixtures

"We simply cannot find enough dates to fit in Camborne and Redruth," said Terry Tandy, Gloucester's secretary. "Even our only fixture against Plymouth Albion lost merit status, at their request, on a County Championship Saturday. Ironically, we won.

"The problem is that we don't want to throw aside old and treasured fixtures, and playing midweek matches against Cornish clubs is impractical because of the distance."

Gloucester are sacrificing invaluable merit points as a result and their South and Southwest performance this season will be harshly judged on playing Bristol and Bath twice each and Exeter once.

This is in sharp contrast to Cornish clubs picking up wins against each other. Camborne stand a lofty second in the table, having beaten Redruth twice and drawn with Exeter, so highlighting the inequalities which have become painfully familiar to Bristol, Bath and Gloucester.

All three have previously failed to qualify for the Cup, Gloucester last season, little more than a year after they had been joint-winners with Moseley.

Last season Gloucester fitted in two fixtures with Launceston, then merit table members, to protect their entry prospects this season.

Gloucester won 50-0 at Kingsholm and 50-9 at Launceston, totalling 30 tries in the process, a meaningless exercise apart from the merit points.

Milk Cup—Fifth Round

WALKER GOAL KNOCKS OUT WATFORD

By ROGER MALONE

Watford ...... 0 Sunderland 1

WATFORD were knocked out of the Milk Cup by Sunderland at Vicarage Road last night—despite controlling much of the first half and fighting back with courage after the break.

Sunderland's weakened ranks not only held out in the first half—even though Watford dominated territorially—but the North-Easterners took the lead two minutes into the second half through Walker.

The odds were stacked heavily against a visiting side deprived of six regulars, through three suspensions, two players being ineligible and one injured.

Furthermore, Watford were unbeaten in five matches and Sunderland had lost all their last five games. Yet the home side suffered the early scares on a frozen surface, on which players often slipped over when attempting to turn quickly.

Sinnott's back pass almost caught a slithering Coton out of position, Barnes pulled up lame —and Sunderland made the first good chance. Cooke, in only his second senior game in a year, ran on to West's low centre, but drove over the bar.

Barnes recovers

With Barnes recovering after attention off the pitch from the trainer, and with Watford establishing their habit of getting many men forward, they began to pen Sunderland into their half of the pitch, gaining five corners and several free kicks.

From these set pieces, Reilly, the tall striker whose heading was a factor in Watford reaching Wembley last season, often caused problems for Sunderland by nudging the ball across the box.

Sunderland's occasional replies often resulted in Corner playing only his second senior game, fail to get enough power behind close-range shots.

Blissett, shaking off Elliott, made an opening, but Taylor could not control the ball which ran through to Turner.

But the good-sized crowd for a cold night—22,591, with several thousand having made the long journey from the North East—saw Watford fall behind five minutes into the second half.

Walker, the former Chelsea winger whose goal had set Sunderland on their way to their surprise 2-1 win at Tottenham, clearly remembered the old adage about nothing ventured, nothing gained.

His speculative 28-yard drive made a violent deflection while passing through a crowd of defenders, and caught Coton wrong-footed.

Watford.—Coton; Sinnott, Rostron, Taylor, Terry, McClelland, Sterling, Blissett, Reilly, Jackett, Barnes.

Sunderland.—Turner; Venison, Pickering, Corner, Chisholm, Elliott, Cooke, Berry, West, Daniel, Walker.

WEST HAM NEED A FIT DEVONSHIRE

By BILL MEREDITH

WEST HAM, ravaged by injuries, are trying to get Alan Devonshire, their England midfield player, match-fit within the next two weeks.

Devonshire has not played in the first team since damaging knee ligaments in last season's third round F A Cup tie with Wigan, but John Lyall, the West Ham manager, said yesterday: "He is now back in full training and raring to go."

It is essential for West Ham that Devonshire is back in action as quickly as possible. The casualty list at Upton Park makes depressing reading for them.

Billy Bonds, Dave Swindlehurst, Tony Gale and Ray Stewart are out with knee injuries, and only Stewart is near to returning.

Mr Lyall plans to give Devonshire a run in the reserves at Watford on Saturday and against Chelsea on Tuesday. "The important thing is for him to get as many reserve matches under his belt as possible," said the manager.

Loan deals

Gary Bailey will miss Manchester's United's fourth round F A Cup tie against Coventry on Saturday. United's goalkeeper has recovered from influenza but injured a finger in training yesterday.

Arthur Cox, the Derby manager, has arranged loan deals with Steve Sutton, the Nottingham Forest goalkeeper, and Gary Ablett, a highly-rated young Liverpool midfield player.

Richard Cadette, 19, who scored Orient's winner in their shock third round F A Cup win over West Bromwich Albion, could miss the fourth round tie against Southampton on Saturday. He injured a knee in Tuesday's Freight Rover Trophy match with Aldershot.

Sheffield United have rejected an increased offer of £15,000 by Bristol City for goalkeeper Keith Waugh, who has been on a month's loan at Ashton Gate.

F.A. Cup Replay

MILLWALL SURPRISE PALACE

By DAVID LUDDY

Crystal Palace 1 Millwall 2

A Steve Lovell header midway through the second-half against Crystal Palace, his former club, earned Millwall this F A Cup 3rd Round replay victory at Selhurst Park last night. Their reward is a fourth round tie at Chelsea or Wigan.

Neither side had played since their 1-1 draw at The Den 18 days ago. But the lack of match practice did not blunt the tackles that were delivered with abundance.

Second Division Palace, beaten only once in their previous 11 games, had the quality, with internationals Irvine and Murphy the creators in midfield, compared to the cut and thrust of Third Division Millwall led by Neal and Lovell, scorers of 32 goals between them this season.

Both goalkeepers were initially negative. Millwall's Sansome failed to collect Cosack's poor back pass in the second minute and Aylott punished them by scoring the opening goal.

Wood then allowed Chatterton's speculative 15 yard shot to go under his body before scooping pared with the cut and thrust of chance with Millwall's 25th minute equaliser. Briley beat the defence and chipped the ball ver the keeper to level the match.

Smith and Cusack were composed in the Millwall defence parring the thrusts and delivering clearances which allowed Neal and Lovell to torment their markers Nebbeling and Cannon.

A forty yard run by Lowndes created Millwall's second goal. His inswinging cross was smartly headed home by Lovell from six yards in the 66th minute — his 20th goal of the season.

It proved to be the match-winner, but not before Mahoney of Palace was sent off a minute from time, after a foul on Lowndes.

Milk Cup

Ipswich and QPR must try again

By MICHAEL CALVIN

Ipswich ... 0 Q P R ... 0

THE treacherous conditions threatened to be the only winner at Portman Road last night when Queens Park Rangers and Ipswich Town fought for the right to meet Norwich in a Milk Cup semi-final next month.

Ipswich's determined approach on a rock-hard surface dusted with snow should have been rewarded as early as the fourth minute.

The nimble Gates, whose influence was to be sorely missed when he limped off midway through the first half, ignored the pressure of two defenders to hook the ball into the path of Putney.

The subsequent cross was low and hard and, with retreating defenders struggling to find their feet, Brennan was unmarked on the edge of the six-yard box when he unleashed an instant shot which hit the crossbar before spinning into the welcoming arms of Hucker.

Fillery booked

Unfortunately Ipswich rare recaptured that initial fluency. Their territorial dominance was unquestionable but, when a bad foul by Fillery, which was punished by a booking, soured the game they struggled to find any real rhythm.

Rangers' main contribution during a disappointing first half was to annoy the home crowd, though there can be no condoning the conduct of the idiot who appeared to throw a beer can at Stainrod.

Though offering little attacking threat Rangers had the consolation of defending the most treacherous goalmouth with some comfort.

Their only other main alarm came three minutes before the interval when Dozzell shot over the bar after substitute D'Avray set up the chance by heading Burley's cross into the area.

The way Ipswich refused to shirk a tackle and came forward whenever possible was personified by Butcher, the captain. His driven cross from the left provided a hint of a chance for Dozzell nine minutes into the second half but, challenged by the impressive Fenwick, the young forward stabbed the ball wide.

The final whistle signalled that a replay must take place at Loftus Road on Monday and, regrettably, also triggered a pitch invasion in which both sets of supporters staged running battles.

The police, apparently lacking in numbers, struggled to contain the violence.

Ipswich.—Cooper; Burley, Butcher, Zondervan, Osman, Cranson, Putney, Brennan, Dozzell, McCall, Gates.

QPR.—Hucker; Neill, Dawes, Waddock, Chivers, Fenwick, Wicks, Fillery, Bannister, Stainrod, Micklewhite.

FA Cup

Norwich frustrated by Birmingham

By A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

Norwich City ... 1 Birmingham ... 1
(after extra time)

NORWICH dominated Birmingham, their Second Division opponents, but had to look sharp to take their F A Cup third round replay into extra time at Carrow Road last night.

Before the match Ken Brown, Norwich's manager, underlined his displeasure with two players he disciplined during the week by dropping both.

Full-back Downs and winger Donowa were heavily fined by Brown in midweek for their confrontation at Anfield last Saturday.

They were rested in favour of young Spearing and the experienced Devine. The decision probably had more to do with their recent poor form.

Norwich welcomed Ron Saunders, a former manager, with a cautious opening assault. Barham repeatedly proved he had the beating of Roberts, the ageing Birmingham left-back, but his succession of crosses brought little result.

Too much respect

Norwich at times seemed to be paying Birmingham a little too much respect. A dour, goalless first half brought only intermittant action.

The skills of Hartford, Norwich's veteran midfield architect, enabled him to create three first-half openings for himself—a header and two shots just wide.

Norwich began the second half in a much more positive frame of mind. Bruce, his side's outstanding defender, burst straight from the kick-off, into the Birmingham penalty area before hitting a powerful shot straight at Seaman.

Woods, in the Norwich goal, had had a quiet match, but in the 73th minute the game then remarkably produced two goals in 20 seconds.

First Wright, the Birmingham captain, caught Woods by surprise with a powerful effort from 30 yards.

From the kick-off Norwich immediately replied, with full-back Havlock latching on to a loose ball to beat Seaman from the edge of the box.

Norwich could not break through again, and the tie went to extra time.

Dechan had a penalty saved by Seaman near the end of extra time.

Galvin & Falco put paid to Charlton

By DONALD SAUNDERS

Charlton ... 1, Tottenham ... 2

A FIRST-HALF goal by Tony Galvin and another from Mark Falco near the end, earned Tottenham an F A Cup visit to Liverpool as they knocked troublesome Charlton out of the competition in an exciting, long-delayed Third Round replay at The Valley last night.

Although Spurs played skilful, forceful attacking soccer they had to battle hard for control against spirited opponents in an exciting tie.

Charlton, however, refused to allow their opponents time to settle for a really telling shot or header. So Falco had a header cleared off the line by Friar, Hughton sliced another chance wide and Johns twice made good saves from Galvin.

Alert Clemence

Charlton were always willing to counter-attack and twice only the alertness of Clemence prevented them stealing the lead.

Still Spurs duly moved in front in the 33rd minute with the simplest of goals. Galvin collected a pass from Perryman, moved in from the left towards the edge of the penalty box and curled the ball just inside the far post.

This made Charlton more determined than ever. They set up a series of purposeful attacks that several times had Tottenham's defence in trouble.

Lee almost equalised with a determined run and shot which swept across Clemence before finishing inches wide of the far post.

Cleared off line

Just before half time, Clemence had to leap across goal to turn aside a fierce volley from Gritt. From the corner, Curtis's header was cleared off the line by Hughton.

Clemence was soon in action again after the interval, moving smartly to hold a firm shot from Curbishley, from the edge of the penalty box. Spurs then moved back into attack and put Charlton's defence under steady pressure.

I thought Tottenham a little unlucky not to be awarded a penalty when Crooks seemed to be fouled by Berry as he was about to shoot. The referee, Alan Gunn, thought otherwise.

So Charlton sighed with relief and resume their determined search for that elusive equaliser.

In the 70th minute Charlton replaced Towner with Dowman and launched a fierce rally. But five minutes from the end, Falco made certain of victory for Tottenham by driving home a corner that had been nodded ono by Crooks.

Three minutes later Miller brought down Moore in the box. The Charlton defender took the penalty himself, driving it firmly into the net.

Charlton. — Johns; Curtis, Friar, Gritt, Moore, Berry, Towner, Curbishley, Lee, Madden, Flanagan.

Tottenham. — Clemence; Stevens, Hughton, Roberts, Miller, Perryman, Chiedozie, Falco, Galvin, Hoddle, Crooks.

LILLIS HITS A DOUBLE

By PETER KEELING

Huddersfield 3, Wolves 1

Watched by David Pleat, manager of Luton, their F A Cup opponents on Saturday Huddersfield reached the Fourth Round by winning this four-times postponed tie through two goals by Mark Lillis and one from Pugh against one by Alan Ainslow for Wolves.

Cooper, who scored twice in Huddersfield's League victory here over Wolves earlier in the season, quickly caused the Midlands side problems again on a tricky snow-covered surface.

Cowling so nearly scored in the 15th minute from a Cooper centre and in the 21st minute goalkeeper Flowers did well to take a long range drive from Cooper.

Both goalkeepers were active with Cox early on doing well to block Buckland and in the 25th minute just stretching to reach a high back pass from Allardyce.

Cowling to rescue

Langley looked set to open the account for Wolves in the 28th minute, only for Cowling to come back into his own penalty area to rob him. Then in the 40th minute Huddersfield took the lead with a Lillis penalty after Haywood had pulled down Cooper.

It was tough for the hard-working Wolves defence who had done well up to this stage but Huddersfield were beginning to get a much bigger share of the ball and looking dangerous.

Straight from the kick-off in the second-half, Huddersfield increased their lead to 2-0. Lillis made a run to the edge of the Wolves' area, Wilson hit a long ball into him and his shot beat the startled Flowers.

To their credit, Wolves did not give up and in the 56th minute they reduced arrears after fine work on the left by young Chapman who sent a ball to the far post for Ainscow to pull the score back to 2-1.

After this Tempest was twice close to clinching the game for Huddersfield. First he shot wide from ten yards with the goalkeeper out of position and then nudged his shot over the bar from a difficult position in the penalty area.

Town clinched victory in the 87th minute when substitute Daral Pugh moved in from the right wing and beat goalkeeper Flowers with a low shot from a difficult angle.

Huddersfield. — Cox; Lowe, Burke, Doyle, Stoutt, Allardyce, Lillis, Cooper (Pugh, 55), Tempest, Wilson, Cowling.

Wolves. — Flowers; Humphries, Haywood, Chapman, Pender, Herbert, Ainscow, Cartwright, Langley, Buckland, Barnes (Butler, 52).

OXFORD HIT NAVY FOR 8

By CHRIS MOORE

OXFORD, without a game since mid-December and desperately in need of practice with the match against Cambridge only a month away, celebrated their resumption by beating the Royal Navy 8-0 at icy Bisham Abbey yesterday.

Even without the injured Monks, usually the strong man of the university midfield, they proved far too quick for a below-strength Navy side and led 2-0 at the interval, both goals coming from Stevenson.

Keohane, the Oxford captain, moved himself to centre-forward for the second half and got his reward by scoring twice. Oldershaw also collected two and Mee and Swallow completed the Navy's discomfort.

It was not such a good day for the other universities, although Cambridge made a good start against the R A F at Coldham's Common, twice taking the lead before losing 4-2.

Substitute's hat-trick

Morris, coming on as a second-half substitute, turned the match the R A F's way with a hat-trick to add to Luffman's earlier goal, with Rush and Sudell scoring for Cambridge.

Newton, the Richmond captain, took London University by surprise with a goal in the first 10 seconds and later completed the scoring as Richmond moved on to a 5-0 victory. In between, Girdwood got two and Bishop added another.

The British Police took an early lead against the Civil Service on a slippery Crystal Palace pitch when Forrest, one of three Ulstermen in the team, finished off a surprise attack.

With the CS coming back into the game, left-winger Holton put them level in the 29th minute and, despite some good chances for the Police in the second half, there was no further scoring.

Ice Hockey

AUTUMN CUP SPONSORED UNTIL 1988

By HOWARD BASS

A NEW ice hockey sponsorship by Norwich Union for at least three years reflects the insurance giant's "great faith in the sport's potential in Britain."

It means financial backing for the Autumn Cup until 1988 and begins immediately with an Anglo-Scottish International on Saturday afternoon at Streatham.

Specially arranged for television, this match will be shown on London Weekend's "World of Sport".

So as not to disrupt Heineken League fixtures, the select teams have been restricted to players from four of the five leading clubs — Dundee Rockets, Durham Wasps, Murrayfield Racers and Streatham Redskins.

Even so, because each country has been allowed to include six "import" players, a star-studded showpiece is in prospect.

With the Heineken League already under an exclusive B B C contract, the likelihood of a corresponding link between Norwich Union and I T V means that the sport can now gain appreciably in coverage on both major channels.

ATLANTIC WEATHER—Noon Jan. 23

Channel 4

2.30 p.m. The British at War: three more war-time films starting with "Went the Day Well?" (1942, b/w). An English village is invaded by German paratroopers disguised as Royal Engineers and the squire turns out to be a fifth columnist. Widely admired at the time and now a valuable document with a good cast including Leslie Banks, Frank Lawton, Thora Hird, Basil Sydney and Elizabeth Allan. Followed by "Five-Inch Bather": film about wartime economy in the depth of bath water, b/w and "From the Four Corners" (b/w): Leslie Howard shows and discusses London's past, with an Australian, a Canadian and a New Zealander. 4.30 Countdown, with Richard Whiteley.

5 00 "WEST POINT STORY" (1950, b/w) — James Cagney as a Broadway producer of musicals visits the American military academy to help stage a show. Thin and obvious entertainment carried along by the enthusiasm of the star, plus Virginia Mayo, Doris Day, Gordon MacRae and Gene Nelson.

7 00 CHANNEL FOUR NEWS — At 7.50 Comment and Weather.

8 00 DISCOVERY — David Bellamy and Miranda Robertson investigate the death of the dinosaurs. Did they fall, because the world went so cold? Or were they pushed, by something from outer space, like a death star or a comet?

8 30 TREASURE HUNT — The South of France. The contestants both come from Cirencester.

9 30 THE PRICE — Episode three and things aren't going well for Geoffrey Carr (Peter Barkworth), his company's shares are sliding and he's not doing too well in trying to raise money for his family's ransom.

10 30 BILLIARDS — Rex Williams v Ray Reardon. Second match in the new tournament.

11 15 ASSAULTED NUTS — Satirical and comic sketches with Elaine Hausman, Wayne Knight, Bill Sadler, Tim Brooke-Taylor, Daniel Peacock, Barry Cryer, Marcelle Rosenblatt and Cleo Rocos.

11 45-12.10 HALL OF MIRRORS — Buddhism. Professor James Mackey talking with Master Daishin Morgan, Abbot of Throssel Hole Priory.

★★ Outstanding. ★ Recommended.

TEBBIT REJECTS STATE ROLE OVER JOBLESS

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent

MR TEBBIT, the Cabinet Minister seriously injured in the Brighton bombing, returned to the party political stage last night with a speech in which he rejected calls by Mr Heath and some other Conservatives for the Government to do more to tackle unemployment.

Addressing a Conservative dinner at the Carlton Club, he described the calls as "nonsense, well-intentioned nonsense, but nonsense nonetheless."

He added: "It is simply not within the gift of Government to decide unilaterally the level of unemployment. Everybody has a part to play.

"It is up to managers to ensure that British goods are the right quality at the right price and delivered at the right time.

"It is up to trade unionists to remember that strikes and restrictive practices are a sure way to destroy jobs in the longer-term rather than preserve them.

"It is up to wage and salary earners to moderate their claims and improve their productivity so as to reduce labour costs, gain new business and allow increased employment.

"And it is up to industry to produce British goods to win back British customers—as well as those abroad—and thus keep British workers in jobs, not the Japanese."

Combative speech

Although Mr Tebbit has spoken in the Commons since he returned from hospital to his duties as Trade and Industry Secretary, last night's speech was his first to a party audience, the dinner having been organised by the Coningsby Club.

As he had done in the Commons, he demonstrated that he had lost none of his enthusiasm for politics, particularly on the combative side.

Linking Mr Heath with two former Labour Prime Ministers, Lord Wilson and Mr Callaghan, on their attitude towards unemployment, he said: "They all searched for the lever. Some thought they had found it, but, like the holy grail or the unicorn's horn, or the social contract, it eluded them."

On Mr Heath's administration, he also said: "Our statutory control of prices and incomes in 1975 was certainly not born out of Tory philosophy or tradition or any desire to wield such centralised powers."

Good intentions

Mr Tebbit also said: "I am sure that those who took powers to control wages and prices did so with the best of intentions. It was the outcome that was such a disaster.

"In other words governments, while deluding themselves that they were helping to reduce unemployment, pursued policies which in themselves relentlessly pushed it up, or allowed, even encouraged, others to do so."

He stressed that "all need not be black" and that the present Government was "creating the conditions in which industry can prosper."

SUPERMAC

By SEAN DAY-LEWIS

Print will show the flaws in his lines. But as Lord Chalfont remarked before curtain rise, television is a medium for impressions, not ideas.

The former Supermac demonstrated that he has lost none of his skill at giving the impression of wisdom and humour. Others who were his contemporaries in the House of Commons as surely indicated that they have maintained their skill at boring.

What was said we shall never know. The BBC went on with worthy interviews about what might happen now that television had broken into Parliament. Channel 4 reverently used prayer time for commercials.

Seeking the limelight

Then at last the big moment arrived. Pugin's elegant set looked uncomfortably full. Rarely can so many of the 12,000 peers entitled to do so have attended a Lords question time and rarely can so many have attempted to elbow their way into the limelight with more or less relevant supplementaries.

The interest in school computers, the subject of the first question from Lord Orr-Ewing, looked to be alarmingly widespread.

The second question from Lord Broxbourne brought similar attention to the subject of euthanasia and opinion was divided as to whether the House was ordering its own early demise through television and its accompanying light.

The behaviour was fairly ordinary by the standards of the outside world, if lacking some of the familiar lordly courtesy familiar to radio listeners.

The BBC producers, Neil Fecles and Peter Kennatta, sought to maintain viewers interest with cutaways to the renowned. But it took an hour to find somebody scratching his nose and almost as long to discover a peer concentrating, that is, thinking so hard that he appeared to be asleep.

When the House turned to its decidedly unspecific debate on economic and social policy, Lord Gowrie, sporting a Sir Robin Day bow tie and a bright orange handkerchief, returned to his customary elegance.

"The best defence of the Government I have heard made," said Lord Stockton, who must have learnt something from his double act in earlier years with the late R. A. Butler.

Praise for bishop

There was more widespread praise for the Bishop of Birmingham who took this opportunity to render his maiden speech.

Maiden speeches avoid controversy and must be praised. That is the custom and it was maintained here with controversial call for "consensus" and national unity and other well-worn phrases meaning the same thing.

He asked whether we "dare forget" some novel of Disraeli—I forget which—and went on to speak of his visit to a Black Country factory "where four men make two million litres of paint a year."

He did not say what other people in the factory do or give any other details.

This was, may be, his bid for a spin-off series set in a paint factory symbolising Britain in a very real sense. What writer would not feel challenged by this idea for a twelve-part script.

'CUT LEVY' PLEA BY LORRY FIRMS

Business for lorries has risen so much due to the pit strike that the industry is asking its training board to reduce its levy to stop it having too much money.

The levy is a percentage of the industry's income, now at 0·8 per cent. The Road Haulage Association wants it cut to 0·75 per cent.

Chernenko 'too sick for public duties'

By NIGEL WADE

PRESIDENT CHERNENKO is too sick to perform public duties but not gravely ill, Soviet officials have told diplomats in Moscow.

Confirmation that a Russian leader is ill is exceedingly rare, sufficiently so to prompt speculation that Mr Chernenko, 73, may have suffered a serious worsening of his chronic lung ailment, emphysema.

Throughout the final six months' absence of President Andropov, who died last February, Russian officials either remained silent or insisted he only had a cold.

Perhaps the embarrassment of that affair has taught Kremlin officials to be more candid about Mr Chernenko's condition. But, judging by the past way of handling such matters, to admit he is too sick to fulfil public duties implies that, despite denials, he could be very ill indeed.

Summit postponed

Mr Chernenko was last seen publicly on Dec. 27, after missing the funeral of the efence Minister, Marshal Ustinov, held outdoors in bitter cold three days earlier.

Diplomats in Moscow say Mr Vadim Zagladin, deputy head of the international department of the Communist party Central Committee, told French visitors the Warsaw Pact summit planned for earlier this month was postponed because Mr Chernenko was not fit to attend. This confirmed the conclusion drawn by diplomats, who could see no other likely explanation.

As was widely forecast by foreign observers at the time of the Chernenko succession a year ago, the party has now, by selecting another old and ailing leader, brought on itself the third crisis of confidence over the President's health in as many years.

President Brezhnev died in 1982, after long speculation over his condition, and President Andropov was in office barely a year before succumbing to kidney disease.

As in the past, messages continue to appear in the leader's name. One was published yesterday about arms negotiations with the United States. But this means nothing; a telegram signed by Marshal Ustinov appeared in RED STAR, the army paper, the morning after he died.

CHERNENKO MESSAGE

Arms talks hopes

OUR DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT writes: A message from President Chernenko to a Moscow peace conference and an article in PRAVDA were interpreted yesterday as signs that the Kremlin has not given up hope that Western European uncertainties about American policies will give it leverage at the approaching arms talks.

Mr Chernenko described in his message how the anti-war movement ha dgrown worldwide in the recent years. The Soviet Union, besaid, would approach the new negotiations in a "business-like and constructive manner" and hoped the United States would be likewise.

The PRAVDA article, by a well known commentator, Vadim Nekrasov, dwelt on the theme of continuing unhappiness among Europe's Nato members over the extent to which Washington would listen to their views during the negotiations.

March date proposed

OUR WASHINGTON STAFF writes: President Reagan disclosed yesterday that the United States had proposed to Moscow that new arms control negotiations should begin in Geneva early in March. No reply from the Russians had yet been received. But he expressed "some optimism" about the prospects for an accord.

STOCKTON TOPS THE RATINGS

By GODFREY BARKER

IT was Lord Emsworth's day of glory. With the Earl of Stockton and 400 lesser nobility, he was a name in lights.

In the greatest publicity hunt the Lords have ever known, the crimson benches were jammed for Mr David Dimbleby's debut at 2.30 p.m. One result, not evident on television, was an appalling smell. Another was a serious breakdown i mnoble courtesy.

Most historically of all, there was a rude proletarian intrusion just before Lord Stockton's soliloquy.

High up in the Gallery, a gent with a beard sharpened on coal-cutting leapt up like Hiawatha. "My Lords," he bellowed politely (even the striking miners were overcome by the dignity of it), "if you wanna do something about unemployment—get rid of the PM."

Noble pates rotated skywards. The television cameras, with incredible restraint, did not.

Vibrated noisily

The beard jerked violently up and down. Around it, women coal-cutters grasped concealed parts of their anatomy and extracted posters: "Kentish miners", "Britain Needs Kent Coal" and even more boring sentiments.

Some 20—of them vibrated noisily and brandished these and pictures of Arthur at Mr Dimbleby, immured in a tiny Dickensian box.

The attendants stood paralysed. Normally they leap the benches in a terrific commando scramble to seize a protester's jugular. Yesterday they were on television.

By now, however, the Earl of Stockton was emulating Lord Olivier's most majestic entrance with the longest-ever rise to his feet. Noble eyeballs swivelled. The proles were forgotten (filing out meekly for Black Rod's dungeon, where they repose).

His Lordship used his Top Ten slot on the ratings for a rather bleak attack on Mrs Thatcher, albeit one more elegant than Mr Heath's.

He lamented, as if in pain, that her economic arguments were "futile, academic and purely theoretical." Opposition peers rolled about in ecstacy.

Heroic finale

"I've often thought," he mused tragically on, "that leading figures in the Tory party had long ago given up Toryism and had taken up Manchester Liberalism of the 1860s."

The Opposition, especially those peers active around 1860, were in seventh heaven.

Stab, kick, thump, he smoothed gracefully on, without once mentioning the Prime Minister by name. His heroic finale was to compare Britain with the Titanic.

Their Lordships were enthralled. The ratings needle bent over the edge of the dial. Never mind that it was much like December's speech. It saved the day.

Waffle waffle

"May I ask my noble kinsman blah blah," rhubarbed Lady Masham. "I think my noble kinswoman would like to know waffle waffle," replied the Earl of Swinton. Mr Dimbleby missed it.

This had not been going very well, thanks to television. Earlier, around 3.15 p.m., noble tempers were as close as they will ever be to snapping.

All the House's windbags had crowded in for Questions. These lasted nearly twice as long as usual. Lord Emsworth, being finally Lord Somebody, just couldn't stop.

Viewers saw, around 2.40 p.m., a Westminster record: a husband answering his wife.

The television was getting it all wrong all the time. "Lord Strabolgi became Lord Strabogli. Lord Stoddart appeared as Lord Stallard and Lord Bruce of Donington was given two "n's". Lord Kinnaird was missed out altogether.

But then it wasn't much like the Lords a tall. The acoustic was quite different, the air of calm, immortal thought under high ceilings was quite absent.

It even looked as if the House might needs appoint a Speaker if there was going to be this much quarrelling about getting on the box.

At 3.45 p.m., halfway through Lord Beswick's rather light-headed ramblings on the economy, Lord Home and Lord Boyd-Carpenter had eyes like slits and Lord Stockton had switched off his hearing aid.

It is to be hoped that viewers did not do likewise.
